ESSAYS

OF

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

STELLIED AND POMPO

WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

BY.

CHARLES DUKE YONGE MA.

ILLOW OF THE ROYL TWINEPSITY OF FIFEHAND, REGIV FROM SOME OF CHOILE, LATERATURE AND MODERN RESIDNAL, QUEEN'S CONTINE, BELL MY, AND AUTROR OF A CONSTITUTE AT RESTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND HYPLAYS, 1709-1780, ETC.

Landon

MACMILLAN AND CO, LIVITID

WENT TOTAL THE THE WALLS AND THE

1907

All rolls received

R GHARD CLIV AND SO'S, LILITED, BREAD SIPPOL HILL DC, A D

BIRDAY, MISSOIL

Terst Feltion, 1982, 5 cond Delton 1989,

Represted, 1895 (turce), 1991 1997

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ESSAY	1	PAG
1	THE FAME MACRING A REVERIE. From 'The Boo,' NO 5
II	On the Instability of Worldly Grandeur, 16 No 6
Ш	CUSTOM AND LAWS COMPARED ID NO 7	1
IV	An Account of the Augustan Age of England 16 No 8	1
V	OARGLAN THE IPISH BAPD Mescellaneous Zesays, No 5	2
VΙ	NATIONAL CONCORD IN No. 15	3
VII	ASEM THE MAN-HALEP, OH, A VINDICATION OF THE WISDOM OF GOD IN THE MORAL GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD AN EASTERN TALE 10 NO 32	3
7111	ON THE ORIGIN OF PORTAY IN No 19	4
ΙX	Torrix distributioned from other Writing Ib No 20	5
X	THE TRYANDS OF THE LEASONES HISTORY OF A FOLL'S GAPDEN 15 No 21	€
ΙΖ	On the Sacacity of the Spider - From ' The Bell' No. 4	7
HX	Periace to the "Chinesi Legices"	7
III	THE CHINEST PHIG-OFMER VISITS WESTMINSTEL ABBEY "Chinese Letters," No. 13	8
XIV	RECEPTION OF THE CHILLSE PHILOSOPHIL DI A LADY OF DISTINCTION 15 NO 14	8
ZA	Enchant Tiearment of Filmon Prisoners 16 No 23	9
XVI	THE WAY IN BLACK II NOS 96, 97 96.	10

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Į,

	11 34
AVIII Printerios of any Cheses is Gathese Co.
Tal Gum Sol Views Ash Views that	100
	l li-
XIX Atticory by the President Wishest JA-	112
NA The Exceptive of Particular and The No. 65	135
XXI Excussilings is D No 50
AMI THE CHANGE Photo order is a program A
Bott 11111 Re No 51	127
OF REPORT OF THE STATE OF THE STATE OF	109
No 90 Pl oxed of Leading thing the Mostle	111
VAV THE GREAT EXPRINE MAPPINES TO SHOW	100
XVI FOREM HOVEN NOTTO H BIND 16 No 70
ANVII THE PRODUCTION OF GRANT TO BEAUTY AN	3 (6
XXVIII Exchant Shors A.D Shork Files 16 No 77
XXIX THE LAILOUING PLANTAN, Ib No 80	272
AXX Ter Labers' That's Reducing 16 No 51
VAL ANICONTESOPSIVE IL POPTS WHO HAVE INVEN	1%
An order of the desayers of Millering.
	363
AXXII THE MANUFP IN MEICH SOME PHILOSOPHIES WHEN TO BE STREET	164
XAAIH TET PROPLE MUST PE COLTINAD CO. I. W. C.
DI THOSE THOU THIS HERE CENTER TO
NO 101
XXXIV THE UNLETS AND LATERY IN MAINT THAT MIGHT	164
RESULT TROM A JOURNEY TO THE EAST ID NO 108
XXV A CONTINED DESCRICT ID No 112	17
10 No 112	12

INTRODUCTION.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF GOLDSMITH OLIVER GOLDSMITH, the author of the Essays from which the present volume is but a selection, was born in 1728, at Pallas, a small parish in the county of Longford, in Ireland, of which his father, a younger son of a gentlem in of good family, was curate In his childhood be was nearly cut off by a severe attack of smallpox, which not only permanently disfigured his features, but left behind it a general weakness which lasted for many years, and so greatly checked his mental, as well as his bodily progress, that his schoolmaster generally regarded him as a backward, it not a stupid boy, though at times he showed a readmess, and even bughtness, that led some of his friends to form a higher opinion of him, a judgment which his subsequent careci amply acquitted of undiscenning partiality. After passing some years at school, first at Athlone, and riterwards at Edgeworthstown, he was removed to Trinity College, Dublin , but, though he had by that time outgrown his early weakness, he achieved no distinction, and was contented with an ordinary degree, which he obtained in 1719

V' ...

Being the fifth child of a large family, he had no patrimony to look to, and therefore, on quitting the University it was necessary for him to choose a pro fession. His father had originally destined him for a commercial life, for which he was disinchned, and for which he was manifestly unsuited by his very unbusinesslike disposition. But now, by the urgent recommendation of one of his uncles by manage, Mi Containe, vicar of Kilsnoie, he was persuaded to offer himself as a candidate for Holy Orders in the diocese of Elphin In his general respect for religion and virtue, and his kind, charitable disposition, he would have displayed no little resemblance to the exquisite picture of the "village preacher" in the 'Descrited Village,' which he is believed to have drawn from his own father, but he had not followed Mi Containe's advice year willingly, and was probably very little disconcerted, when Dr Synge, the Bishop, rejected him according to his sister's account, because he had not yet reached the proper age, according to another report, which his fondness for gry dress readers by no means improbable, because he presented himself in the unclerical attire of a pair of scurlet breeckes 1

Whatever may have been the cause of his failure, it did not indispose Mr. Containe to make further efforts to assist him, and he procured him a private into slipp in the founds of a Mr. Firms, of Roscommon, but for some reason or other he soon weared of the situation, it seems probable that he found he was expected to mute the duties of humble companion of the father to those of instructor of the son in a way that was 11 ksome to his independent spirit. Whatever may have been the cause, at the end of a few months he relinquished his post, and prepared to emigrate to one of our North American colonies, but the ship in which he had taken his parsage sailed sooner than he had expected, leaving him behind, and, as bis faic, which had been prepaid, had taken nearly all his money, he was reduced to great difficulties It is characteristic of the impulsive good-nature which, to the end of his life, was a marked feature of his disposition, that, though be had only five shillings left to carry him back to his home, more than 100 miles distant, he gave half of it to a poor woman whom he met on the road, and who moved his compassion by a piteous tale of distress Ho calculated, indeed, on obtaining a further supply from a friend whom he himself had often obliged in a similar way, but who, on being applied to, ungratefully turned his benevolence and subsequent distress into ridicule, and gave him no aid beyond the present of an oak stick. which, following (unconsciously as we may suppose) the advice of Bishop Jewell to Hooker, he facetiously called a safe nag to carry min forward on his journey,1 Goldsmith, as he told the story to his mother, " was in some doubt whether he should not, in the first instance, apply it to his pate" But his unworthy friend's head was saved by the arraval of another

¹ See No XVII of this selection

¹ He has introduced this modent into the adventures of George Primroe, many of which were taken from his own experience "Yourne going, my boy," cred J, "to London on toot, in the numner Hocker, your great ancestor, travelled there before you. Take from me the same house that, was given him by the good Bishop Jevel, this staff "—Vivon of Wed, feld, e.

usitor, and Goldsmith contented himself with bidding him put the steed back into his own stable. He now determined to study medicine, a science bidding him put has seen back into his was such as the now determined to study medicine, a science for which he seems at all times to have entertained a predilection, and crossed over to Edinburgh to study the profession. But he was not very well satisfied with the Scotch physicians, and at the end of the year he decided on removing to Leyden. And a comical distress, which delayed his voyage, saved his life, he quitted Letth in a small smack for Newcastle, expecting there to find a vessel bound for Holland, but some of the passengers, though natives of Sociand, hidd commissions in the French service and, on his arrival at Newcastle, they were taken up on the chatge of onlisting soldiers for the Pretender, and he was for a moment involved in the same accusation, and proceeded also. Since the ship in which he had intended to sul was wrocked on her passage, and every soil on bould was drouned. However, he was specially set at liberty to prosecute his voyage with better fortune; in an May 1763 he reached Leyden. But if we a time the Dutch physicians satisfied him no better than the Stotch had done and he about and the about the methed studies, and readved to spend some time in travelling, not being dounted by his want of furds, because he hid heard of a Durish scholar, "the favours Baron Holberg," who had recently traversed the greater part of Europe "on foot, without money, recommendations, or furnds, a good voice and a triding shill in music heing the only financia he had to support an undertaking sectionare, so he travelled by day, and at right sang at the doors of the peasants' houses to get himself a lodging "1 Goldsmith was not a singer, but he played the flute with considerable taste and some skill, and his instru ment was often put in requiration to pry for the hospitality which he received Off, as he says of

"Would the village place his wondious power, And dance forgetful of the noontake hour "

But he dul not confine his visits to the poorer classes, at times when, by some means or other, his finances were in a better condition than usual, he mixed in higher somety. In one of his letters he even speaks of having beheld the beauties who graced the Court at Versulles, and he was received as a visitor by Voltaire, of whose courtly manners, general ability, and, more especially, of whose wit and conversational powers, he conceived an enthusiastic admiration

From France he proceeded to Haly, and at Padua he is generally believed to have locerved the degree of Doctor of Medicine But he did not extend his turvels to the Southern Provinces being apparently detented by the signs of a speedy renewal of the war between France and England And in 1755 he returned to England, which, except on the occasion of his detention at New castle, he had not yet seen Apparently his mouns, from whatever source they and been derived, were now exhiusted, for the variety of cecupetions in which, during the next few months. he engaged, is of itself a proof of the difficulty he found in maintaining bym-elf He became an usber in a school, then a chemist's resistant, then be set up as a physician in Southwark, but found that those

· -

^{1 .} Enquiry into the Frencht State of Polite Levining, c. 6

was a prejudice against Scotch of Irish practitioners, which effectually cut him off from all hope of humanive practice; and the failure of his attempt involved him in greater districts than over. There is a tradition that he jounch a company of strolling players, which derives combinance from his description of the adventures of George Primiose, and many years afterwards, when fortune was smiling on him, he spoke of himself as having at one time "lived among the beggars in Asc Line," a remunscence which, if it had any foundation, must have referred to this period.

But, as his happened in other instances, this extiemity of distress drove him into the path of fame

That

"Magister actis, insentque largitor Venter "1

excited the same influence over him in London that it had existed over Persias seventeen hindred years before at Rome, and drove him as a last resonues to seek a breinhood by his pen. Twenty years before Johnson, who was now enjoying the highest reputation among the literary men of the period, had bagun as a writer in magazines, and publications of that kind had recently multiplied. Besides the 'Gentie-

I Ti uislated by Divilen -

"Who trught the paret human notes to try, Or with a rowe orded the chattering pyo? "The withy want, force hunger to appears,

Want taught their mastern, and their masters they."—

Dan letter of the Prologie to Privile Solvies
And to, in 'The View of Washeld,' George Privince is reliable, and the telling his father how, among other expedients for obtaining a lawelined, the rind "to write fin broal".

man's Magazine,' there were the 'Monthly Review,' the 'Critical Review,' the 'British Magazine,' the 'Public Ledger,' and to all these he began to send in contributions, the ment of which was soon perceived by the reading public, and, consequently, by the publishers By the beginning of 1759 he had become so well known that Dodsley, the leading publisher of the day, listened favourably to his proposals of a separate work, 'An Enquiry into the Present State of Polito Learning in Europe, which was very generally praised, though in it he had the boldness to assaul the whole body of professed critics as a class of writers whose increase was both a proof and a cause of the decline of learning "Leaining," he contended, "may be distinguished into three periods . its commencement, or the age of poets, its maturity, or the age of philosopheis, and its decline, or the age of critics" But, though this seemed like a deliberate challenge to that brotherhood, the challenge remained unanswered The little volume was too highly praised for them to venture to attack it, and he soon had the proofs he most desired of the esteem in which it was held. He had no longer to seek admission on the staff of publishers and editors, they began to seek him. In the autumn of 1751 a publisher named Wilkie projected a periodical called 'The Bee.' to consist entirely of essays, and of those all that have survived were the work of Goldsmith And before the end of the year, Smollett, then in the height of his reputation as a novelist and historian, sought his co-operation in a magazine which, on the first day of 1760, he began to publish under such patronage as no other work before or since has ever received George II . not generally a very enthusiastic patron of literature, having granted his formal permission that 'The British Magazine, or Monthly Repository for Gentlemen and Ladies,' should be announced as published "by the king's authority". To this magazine Goldsmith, while it lasted, was a frequent contributor, but with the publisher of another, which was first assued in the same month. under the title of the 'Public Ledger,' he made a monoformal and permanent arrangement For £100 n yers he undertook to furnish papers of an amusing character twice a week, and it is to this ongagement is owing that series of papers on which his reputation as an essay ist of the very first class is chiefly founded More than one writer had put forth comments on passing events in the chuacter of a foreign traveller, A Gencere, named Marana, bud led the way with a volume which had recently been translated into English, under the tatle of 'The Turkish Spy' The celebrated Montesqueen had mutated him in the 'Lettres Persannes' And now Goldsmith, adopting the same idea, surpressed both the Italian and the Frenchman Above a year before, in a sportive letter to one of his lish friends,1 he had imagined a Chinese philosopher in a future age commenting to his pupils on the excellence of some works which, though anonymou-, were in fact the production of one Oliver Goldsmith, who flourished in the 18th and 19th centuries, and lived to be 103 years old And he now revived the idea, with the modification of making his Chinese philosopher a contemporary travelling in England, and communicating his remarks on what he saw to his friends at home. In the fourth number of the . Public Ledger' he inserted a humorous preface on the character of Chinese authors and writings, apparently intended to show that their style closely resembled what that of a Butash Essayist was, or ought to be-" The Chinese are always concise; they are simple, they are grave and sententious" And the Preface was accompanied by the first of the travellor's letters Two more appeared in the course of the next week; and they instintly became so popular as to form the chief attraction of the 'Ledger' Such they continued to be through more than a hundred numbers; and though more than a century has elapsed since their first appearance, the applause which then greeted them has lost little of its warmth or vigour When afterwards collected and reprinted in a separate volume they were entitled 'The Citizen of the World,' and this, though a far less descriptive or accurate title, is that by which they have since been generally known A connected series of papers naturally takes higher rank than a single detached essay, however heely or sensible, and the plan of these letters admitted an infinite diversity of subjects and treatment. Juvenal had proposed to himself to embrace in his satures all that men do, or wish, or fear, or delight in, or are offended at, and Goldsmith

¹ Mr Bryanton of Ballymahon The letter is dated Aug 14, 1758, and is given at length by Prior in his Life, v 260

^{1 &}quot;Quicquid agunt hommes, votum, tunor, ira, voluptas, Gaudia, discursus, nostri est furago libelli"—1 80

Translated by Dryden .-

[&]quot;Whatever since that golden age was done, What human kind desires, and what they shun, Ruge, passions, pleasures, impotence of will, Shall this estimed collection fill."

made the lumbrations of his philosophical traveller equally comprehensive. The wisdom and the value, the weaknesses, the follows of these among whom for the moment his lot is crist equally attract his notice, and in all his sentiments and language are such as become a philosopher, his censure, when he is compelled to blawe, grave without butterness, his laughter, when he cannot but laugh, hearty without apperty or indeness

The letters at once established his fame as an esengist of the very first class, and caused his noquaintance to be sought by all who felt or professed a love for literature—a body which at that time included no inconsiderable number of persons of tashion of both sexes. Fanke was so connected with Dodsley, as the editor of the 'Annual Register,' that it is probable that he had already become acquainted with his countryman, and Dr Percy, afterwards famous as the Bishop of Dromore, and the editor of the well-known 'Reliques of English Poetry,' had sought him out a year or two before, and now introduced him to Johnson, who by this time had come to be recognised as a supreme authority on all literary questions, and who was auxious for his sequintance, regurding him as "one of the very first men we now had as an author, and a very worthy man toe" (Boxwell's 'Lefe of Johnson,' 1 388) The acquaintines speedily repeal into inumary, and we are indebted to it for much of our knowledge of Goldsmith's babits and way of living, since he was too important a member of Johnson's bornety to be passed over by his biographer Boswell, though Boswell does not always place him in the most favourable light The biographer was far from being the stupid person that Mu aulay represents him but it is very probable that Mr. Prior is right in thinking him jealous of Goldsmith's large share of Johnson's friendship which he desired to monopolice And Mr Prior has critamly proved that some of the stories of foolish sayings and actions which Boswell attributes to him are entirely void of foundation Johnson introduced him to Reynolds; and when, a year or two afterwards, these celebrated friends founded "The Club." which still flourishes as "The Laterary Club," Gold-mith was invited to become one of the original members 1 And he had hardly joined it when he established beyond all dispute his right to a high place in such a society, by the pubheation of 'The Traveller,' a poem which, if its comparative brevity compels us to rank it as but a cabinet picture when compared with other works of greater magnitude, yet for truth and punity of feeling, for correctness of imagery and delicacy of execution, need fear a comparison with few of its bulkier and more pretentious rivals. It was at once pronounced the finest poem that had been written since the death of Pope, and Mr Prior points out that it's plan is eminently entitled to the praise of originality, since it was a new feature in 'Travels' to dwell more upon the moral characteristics of the people of the different countries described than upon the local features and scenery And he claims for its author the ment of being, in this respect, the precursor and model of Lord Byron, whose 'Childe

¹ See an account of "The Club" in Lord Stanhope's 'History of England,' vi. 478

Harold "in all its leading point, may be considered a kind of 'Travelter' on a more extended 'cule" ('Lafe of Goldsmith,' u. 27.)

The fame he had acquard did not make him alle Indeed, has pan was still his outs hardhood; and his labours as an e-sayut, an editor, and accusonally as a biographer, were unconstituer. There agree those who would from have induced how to embrak m an additional Lind of work, which imdoubtedly they would have found means to make profitable to him At one time, we do not I now the precise occusion, Dr Scott, eleplant to Lead Sandwich, and known hunself as a diligent party pumphleters, was sent to him by the Government of the day, "to offer him carte blanche if he would write in support of the administration" To Dr Scoti's istonish ment, and, indeed, indignation, he rejected the proposal, though accompanied with an offer of the most liberal payment. As Dr Scott described his unswer, "He was so absuid as to say, I can can as much as will supply my wants without writing for any party, the assettance therefore you offer is unnecessury to me." We may differ from Di Scott, and think that a man who, though hving "in a miserable set of chambers in the Temple," could thus decline offers which must bind him to defend measures which in his heart, perhaps, he did not approve, but his support of which was to be munificently rewarded, displayed not "absurdity," but an independence of spurt which can hardly be too much admired. And, at all events, it will hardly be denied that, if a bargam had been struck which had given us, instead of 'The Deserted Village,'

¹ Prior's 'Life of Goldsmith' 11 278

'The Vicar of Wakefield,' and 'She Stoops to Conquer,' political pamphlets such as the 'False Alaum,' and 'Taxation no Tyranny,' the gain to the existing administration would have been more than counterbalanced by an incalculable loss to the literature of the country and of the world

His boast that he could earn by his pen enough to supply his wants was not ill-founded. The admiration excited by his poem, coupled with the success of his 'Chinese Letters,' had given the London publishers so high an idea not only of his genius, but also of its versatility, that proposals for works of a wholly different kind crowded upon him, for all of which the publishers agreed to pay large sums Mr Prior bas printed agreements between him and the projectors of different historical works, by which he was to receive a hundred guineas for each volume. His first work of the land was a 'History of Rome,' in two volumes, which Johnson extelled as a plain narrative, "telling the reader shortly all he could want to know, and written m a style that would bear frequent re-perusal" And he maintained that, as such, it was far superior to ' Robertson's cumbrous detail." It was followed by a 'History of England,' on a similar scale, and that by a 'History of Greece' And the publishers ex-pected even more from a 'Natural History of Animals,' which he undertook, and of which the first volumes were only published a few months before his death. It was not, perhaps, a subject with which he was especially qualified to deal, as his acquaintance with it was undoubtedly superficial; but Johnson, whale allowing him no great

INTRODUCTION

tvin

knowledge of it, prophesied that "he would make it as entertaining as a Persian tale, he had the art of compiling, and of saying everything he had to say in a pleasing munner." And this, perhaps, is the utmost praise that can fairly be given to his his torical works They were written in a lively, animated, and emmently pure style, and procured him the remarkable compliment of being appointed Professor of History to the Royal Academy, on the original establishment of that famous institution, but, though abridgments of them, which were also executed by himself, long kept then place as schoolbooks, they have been supersoled by other works of higher protensions and greater research Where he was unam presed was in works of a more original character, in which his fancy could expirinte without the restraint imposed by facts upon a historian The success of 'The Traveller' naturally tempted him to seek fresh glory in the field of poetry, and it was soon known that be was employing himself on a nosm founded in a great measure on his own early resollections. On none of his works did he ever bestow an equal amount of care and labout We are assured that he employed two years in giving it the highest degree of polish, but, before he sent it forth to the world, a further proof of his versatility had been afforded by his appearance as the author of a novel, 'The Vicar of Wakefield' Its publication forms quite an era in the listory of fiction. In the plot, and in the management of the details of the story, there are not a few moonsist-encies, to which indeed, he may be regarded as pleading guilty in the short preface or adventise-ment which he preased to it, and which hegins with the admission that "There are a hundred faults in this thing, and a bundled things might be said to prove them beauties. But it is needless A book may be amusing with numerous errors, or it may be very dull without a single absurdity." The verdict instantly given by the whole body of readers was, that it was "amusing," and something more That it was, to borrow by anticipation the character given of it by one of the very few novelists who have surpassed it, Sir Walter Scott, "one of the most delicious morsels of fictitious composition on which the human mind was ever employed." In his advertisement he had disclaimed for it pretensions to wit or humour , but the correctness of the disclaimer was not acknowledged by its readers On the contrary, many of the opening chapters are instinct with the very richest humour, many, too, with a touching pathos What is even more admirable, by reason of the qualities of an opposite character which disfigure the majority, and especially the most brilliant novels of that and the preceding generation, is the understing punity of the work in every part, in the conception of the whole, and in the execution of the details. And the combination of these qualities was at once recognised by the unprecedented demand which arose for it It was not published till the end of March 1766 Before the end of the year it had run through three editions, nor was its popularity confined to this country It was translated into French, Italian and German, and to this day it is frequently used in more than one foreign school as the book from which youthful pupils may be most profitably taught the English language

The delight caused by 'The View of Wakeheld' had not subsided when the author came forward in a new character, that of a dramatist Again, in the purity of his scones, exhibiting a creditable difference from the comic writers of the preceding generation, whose aim appeared to have been to throu over the most shameless profligacy the protection of the most sparking wit. Goldsmith's comedies are but two 'The Good-natured Man' and 'She Stoops to Conquer' And it is remarkable that neither of the theatrical managers of the day, Garrick nor Coleman, was sangume of their success. That of the former of the two was indeed but inoderate, it contrins more than one scene of great humour, but they are counterbalanced by others which can hay an connect parameter by camera which the hardly be denied to be rather technor. But the second, 'She Stoops to Conquer,' is put beyond the reach of criticism or disparagement by the simple fact, that above a century after its first representation, it is still a favourite, and in the metropolitan and country theaties is still constantly acted, and never without applause, and, what the author himself considered the smest test of the morit of a comedy, laughter Indeed, next to the masterpieces of Shendan, it will probably be very generally admitted to have been the best comedy produced in the last hundred years

All three successes only heightened the engorness with which the long-promised poem was looked for, and at last, in May 1770, it came out under the title of 'The Deserted Village,' and it surpassed in popularity even the most admired of his previous works Before the end of June three more editions were published and sold, and the favour which greeted its first appearance, being founded on real and solid beauties, can hardly be said to be diminished at the present day. Then brevity, as has been proviously confessed, may cause it and 'The Traveller' to be regarded but as cabinet pictures, when compared with longer poems in many books, but length is a very unsafe and delusive criterion of excellence, and, however they may surpass it in length, few poems in the language equal the real poetic feeling which pervaded the new poem, its case and grace, or its truth to nature, equally conspicuous in the pictures drawn of scenery and of persons; of "The never-fuling brook, the busy mill,

^{1 &#}x27;She Stoops to Conquer' was, however, a later work than 'The Deserted Village'

The decent church that tops the neighbouring hill.
The hawthorn bush with seats beheath the "hade,
For talking age and whispering lovers made."

or of "the village preacher,"

"Passing rich with forty pounds a year "

The "village schoolmaster," of severer temper, "the long-remembered beggar", and "the broken soldier," who, cheered by the vicar's sympathy,

"Wept o'er his wounds or tales of sorrow done, Shoulder'd his crutch, and show'd how fields were won"

No doubt the poem owed much of its beauty and power to the fact that it was founded almost wholly on his personal experience. The village of Lassoy, near Ballymahon, where much of his youth was passed, and of which his brother Henry was the genius It was such as could only have been called forth by the still more valuable qualities of the heart Bunke burst into tears on hearing of bis death, and the great painter Reynolds was so affected that he laid down his brush, and was too much overcome to resume it for the rest of the day He was buried in the graveyard of the Temple Church, and a monument elected to his memory in Westminster Abbey-a medallion, giving a futhful representation of his features, accompanied by an epitaph from the pen of Johnson, which, bowever eulogistic, did not go beyond the writer's honest conviction. It declared that there was scarcely any kind of composition that Goldsmith had not attempted, and not one which he bad attempted in which he had not excelled. It was a grand panegyiic to have been earned by a man who was only forty-five years old at his death. Not was it a fleeting sentiment that thus konoured his memory forty-five years old at his death. Not was it a fleeting sentiment that thus honoured his memory with tokens of sorrow and admination. A hundred years after he had passed away, Thinty College, where he had completed his education, resolved to honour itself by commemorating the genius of the most bulliant ornaments of hierature that it had ever sent forth, and the great contemporaties, Gold-smith and Bunke, were rightly chosen as the two men whose works had reflected the greatest honour on the University and the country, and when two bionze statues faithfully representing their features were placed in front of the college gates, the general voice, not only of their nature Ireland, but of overy nation by which the English Language is spoken, monounced that few compliments had ever been paid which reflected greater honour, not only on those who were the objects of them, but on those who paid them

INTRODUCTION

XXIII

It would occupy too much of our space to enter here into an examination of Goldsmith's merits as poet, novelists, and drauntist. It is only as an Escapist that we have to deal with him in this volume, and it may not be out of place to preface our romarks on him in this character with a few general observations on the history and character of English Essay writing, especially since that class of composition is more cultivated at the present day than at any preceding period.

Johnson, in his Dictionary, defines an (exty as "a loose sally of the mind, an miggular, undigested piece of composition, "and subsequently, as " a trial" (which, indeed, seems to be the strictly etymological meaning of the word), quoting Glanville, who, in the preface to one of his own compositions, says-"this treatise pudes itself on no higher title than an essay, or imperfect attempt at a subject" Johnson's definition of "a treatise" being "a discourse, a written tractate" It will hardly be said that this explanation is clearer than the word it professes to explain But, from a general point of view, it may perhaps be laid down, though it is difficult to draw a precise line of distinction between the two, that a treatise differs from an essay in being more elaborate and copious, to use a modern phrase, more exhaustive With this understanding, we may say that of the Opu-cula of Cicero the De Senectule and De Amicitia are treatises, the Paradova are essays Among modern nations the English and the French are those by which essay writing has been most studied, though the earliest modern essayist was the great Italian Machiavelli; a man, like our Goldsmith, of singular versatility, dramatist, poet and historian. His short compositions on Florentine Reforms, on the nature of Frenchmen, on the affairs of Germany, are clearly essays, not treatises, and some might be inclined to add to these his shrewd commentaries on Lavy A Frenchman too, Montaigne, preceded the earliest of our English essayists, but no two writers could be more unlike than the Florentino and the Frenchman Machiavelli being always as clear as he was profound in his views, close in his argument, and accurate in his language, while it cannot be denied that Montaigne is open to the charge that Goldsmith brings against bun,1 of having been "during his whole his incapable of thinking connectedly" And it may be that he owes no small portion of the popularity which he enjoys among his countrymen to the contrast which his nambling style of thinking and writing, "without any decided plan, or distinct object, often ignorant whither he is going, but never in doubt whither he designs to go" (to quote the words of one who is not less a waim admirer than a shiewd critic), affords to the logical precision of thought and language, which are the more usual characteristics of his fellow-countrymen

It was equally different from the style of the English writer, who in some degree may be called his contemporary, Francis Bacon, Loid St Albums Montaigne died in 1592, and Bacon published his first series of essyrs in 1597.2 They was essyrs in

¹ Review of Crecie's 'Tu-culum Disputations' Miscellaneous Works vol 17', p 413

Bagraphie Universelle, see Montaigne

INTRODUCTION

XXXI

the strictest sense of Johnson's definition, attempts at a subject, slight sketches of it, hints suggesting further reflections to the reader; brief but most pargnant texts to be pardered on, and enlarged upon by others. We may be at a loss whether to call Milton's 'Ancoproprier' an essay or a treatise, and we should undoubtedly give the name of treatise to Dryden's composition on 'Satne,' and 'Dramatic Poesy,' had not be himself entitled them essays. They are misterpieces of critical comment and exposition, evidently intended to exhaust the subjects with which they deal. And one of them, the 'Essay on Dramatic Poesy,' may be thought more especially designed to show this intention, since in it his work as a discussion between several interlocutors The next, the eighteenth century, however, is that which, in the history of our national literature, may be specially denominated the age of the essayists. Steele led the way Periodical papers had, indeed, been previously published at intervals, most commonly on questions of policy (we do not, however, include political pumphlets in our ideas of essays), but in some instruces on matters of taste, or morality ,1 but even the names of them and of their authors have for the most part perished, and indeed they probably did not deserve to hve But in the middle of the reign of Queen Anne, Steele projected a series on a new plan. He called it the 'Tatler,' and the name was indicative of the class of matter that was designed to be found in it. As he hoped to obtain for it a circulation in the provinces as well as in London, it was to appear three days in

¹ See Macaulay's article on Addison

he has, to some extent, imitated Plate, representing battle of Blenheim, but who could bring political Itish Parliament. Addison embraced the proposal mark, who had also been occasional contributors to its predecessor. That also was continued for about the same length of time, when it gave way to the 'Guardian,' which, however, had no very long life , and after an interval of some years, and in a new reign, was succeeded by the 'Fresholder' They had all a large, for the time an extraordinary cuculation; but that which in the eyes of the later generations, is the romosentative of ill is unquestionably the 'Spectator', and, according to the same judgment, the 'Spectator' is little more than

INTRODUCTION

XXVIII Addrson As the personification of the 'Speciator,' the ments of Addison have been extelled by two enthusiastic adminers. Johnson closes the bio graphical sketch of him which is contained in the 'Lives of the Ports,' with passe of the "genuine Angliesen" of his style. "What he attempted he performed, he is never leeble, and he did not wish to be energetic, he is never rapid, and he never stagantes His sontences have neither studied amplitude, nor affected brevity, his periods, though not diligently rounded, are voluble and easy Who over wishes to obtain an English style, familiar but not coarse, elegant but not estentations, must give his days and nights to the study of Addison" This last sentence is a manifest imitation of Quinti han's enlogy of Cicero, but we may suspect that our Doctor was led thus to borrow the onlogy of the great Roman critic for his own count. yman, by a consciousness how widely the style of Addison differed from his own For he was too acute and too candid not to be aware of the defects of his own, which on one occasion he described as having "too big words, and too many of them" Other-wise it might have occurred to him that one part of his panegyric, to a certain extent, disproves the other, for that a style, which never aims at being "energetic," must meritably at times be "feeble" And we think it is generally felt that not unfrequently, especially in his moral essays, Addison is feeble, and, to use a modern expression, prosy His critical articles, especially those on Paradise Lost,' are almost universally admitted to be unworthy both of the subject and of the author

1 " His se profeciese seiet un Cicero valde placebit"

More recently, one of the most distinguished writers of the last generation, whose disposition, however, always led him to run into extremes whether of praise or blame, while he fully endorses all Johnson's praise of his style, adds to it an enumeration of almost every conceivable excellence. According to Lord Macaulay, in humour he surpasses Swift, and even Voltaire; in wit he excels Congreve; in ingenuity and liveliness of allegory he outdoes Lucian, in keen observation of, and sly sature on, the follies of the age, he equals Horace, in rich colouring he outvies the 'Arabian Nights', in ecenee from common life he rivals Goldsmith; and, to crown all, his "religious meditatione will hear a comparison with the finest passages of Massillon" We will not quote an old verse which affirms that come praise is "satire in disguise," nor would we for a moment withhold our cordial assent to the assertion that the lessons of morality which Addison inculcatee are always pure, that he observed varieties of character with penetrating shrewdness, and painted them with a delicate humour always under the contiol of good-nature and good-breeding We will at present content ourselves with pointing out that these admissions, which are made with cordial willingness, do not involve the assertion that even in these qualities he had no equal

Something less than forty years after the publication of the last 'Freeholder,' Johnson himself entered the same area, with the 'Rambler' and 'Idler,' to wards both of which he received so few contributions from other writers, and those so unimportant, that they may both be regarded as the work of him alone. But, though his reputation as a great thinker TXT and talker created a fair demand for them at the trme, they have long ceased to attract notice, and which have long been forgotten

INTRODUCTION

are known only to the curious In truth his magmloquent and cumbrous fashion of speaking and writing, on no subject very well adapted to attract the generality of readers, was especially unsuitable for that lighter class of hteratme, which if it cannot be read with ease is not likely to be read at all Still, as they sold for a time, they stimulated imitation, and in the 'Life of Johnson' we see occasional mention of the 'Adventurer,' the 'Connoisseur,' and the 'World,' none of which however maintained an existence for more than a few months, and all of

But between the publication of the 'Rambler' and the 'Idler,' Goldsmith, as we have seen, settled in London to earn a livelihood by his pen, and, as has been already mentioned, began with contributions of essays to different magazines, and the appearance of the carlier 'Chinese Letters' was nearly coincident with the issue of the last numbers of the 'Idler' As we have already seen, their excellence was at once acknowledged Johnson frankly owned the author's superiority to himself in that class of composition And we may fairly infer from the tones in which he from time to time spoke of both, that he would have hesitated to assert his inferiority even to Addison We have seen the ments which Lord Macaulay attributes to the letter, and, without attempting to institute any formal comparison between the two, we may fairly contend that many of the excellences which Lord Macculay attributes to the one are found in high perfection in the other also. If we seek for ingenuity and liveliness of allegory the tale of

'Azem the Manhater,' or the description of 'The Gardens of Virtue and Vice,' furnishes ample proof that in fictions of this kind Goldsmith need have feared no rivalry If we desire some Horatian pleasantry on fashionable follies, the description of the reception of the Chinese philosopher by the fine lidy, or of the way in which he found himself at the mercy of the puffing shopkeeper, will sufficiently gratify the most exacting taste for such delicate sature It may be admitted that in none of his essays has Goldsmith drawn a character with the delicate discernment and humour and the elaborate finish which charm us in the portrait of Sir Roger de Coverley, but his pictures of the whole Primrose Family, of the amiable and venerable father, of the simple son with his gross of green spectacles, and of the outdoing of the monotonous gallery of the Miss Flamboroughs, with an orange apiece in their hands. by the grand historical group which proved too large to pass through any door in the house, show that it was only because the plan of the 'Chinese Letters' did not admit of so detailed a delineation of a single character that they contain no counterpart to Sn Roger But besides these lighter graces, the essays of

Roger

But besides these lighter graces, the essays of Goldsmith are nich in more solid excellences; they maintain throughout as high a standard of vintious feeling and moral purity as is to be found in John son himself, who aimed especially at the fame of a rigid moralist, they are periaded throughout with an instinctive honesty that never palters with truth They display, moreover, a largences of view, and especially an accuracy of political judgment, which few writers, if any, of the century, except, perhaps,

Swift, had intherto displayed. It has been often dwelt upon as a proof of Lord Chesterfield's political foresight that he discerned signs of the revolutionary spirit which was beginning to animate the French many years before it was developed in action. Lord Chesterfield was a professed politician, but in this instruce of sagacity he was not superior to the scholar in his garret, who, in one of the 'Chinese Letters,' is at least equally distinct in his utterance of the very same prediction, and who, in his advocacy of a relaxation of the penal law-, shows himself in advance of every statesman of his ago, suggesting the very reforms which, above half a century afterwards, Remilly and Mackintosh made it their glory to promote Johnson admitted that in style Addison did not wish to be energetic, but Goldsmith, not less easy and elegant, when ease and elegance are all that his subject demands, exhibits, when dealing with graver subjects, a terseness and vigout which perhaps no other writer of the century, except Swift, has equalled

It may be added that, though we are here speaking of him only as an eases just, in other branches of laterature neither Addison nor Johnson can be compared to him for a moment. Flattery itself could never place the 'Campaign', nor even 'The Vanity of Human Winhes,' on a level with 'The Deserted Village', nor 'Cato' or 'Irene' with 'She Stoops to Conquer', nor compare 'Rasselas,' to 'The Vicar of Wakefield'. Nor should it be forgotten in our estimate of Gold smith's genuis that all these great works were produced in fifteen years, and that the author had scarcely reached middle age when he was prematurely cut off Literature his rarely sustained a greater loss, and probably no one who reflects on his genus and his industry will question the justice of Johnson's conclusion, that the longer he had hived the better he would have deserred his place among the great writers of the nation in the great National Abbey.

Abby.

Goldsmith himself, in one of his icriews, complains of the great difficulty of making a selection from works when all are equally good. His own great variety renders such a task one of especial difficulty in his case. In such a publication as the present is impossible to avoid the observed of much that one would have desired to insert. But the aim of the Editor has been to give the reader an idea of the versathlity of Goldsmith's genius, by showing the skill with which he deals with every variety of subject.

GOLDSMITH'S ESSAYS.

I.

THE FAME MACHINE A REVERIE FROM 'THE BEE,' No. 5

Scarcely a day passes in which we do not hear compliments paid to Dryden, Pope, and other waters of the last age, while not a month comes forward that is not loaded with invectives against the writers of this Strange, that our critics should be fond of giving their favours to those who are insensible of the ohligation, and their dislike to those who, of all mankind, are most ant to retain te the injury.

Even though our present writers had not equal ment with their predecessors, it would be politic to use them with ceremony. Every compliment paid them would be more agreeable, in proportion as they least deserved at Tell a lady with a handsome face that she is pretty, she only thinks at her due, it is what she has heard a thousand times before from others, and disregards the compliment but assure a lady the cut of whose visage is something more plain, that she looks killing to-day, she instantly bridles up, and feels the force of the well-timed flattery the whole day after Compliments which we think are deserved, we accept only as debts, with midfle once; 2

but those which conceience informs us we do not merit, we receive with the same gratitude that we do favours given away

Our gentlemen, however, who preside at the distribution of literary fame, seem resolved to part with praise neither from motives of justice nor generosity one would think, when they take pen in hand, that it was only to blot reputations, and to put their seals to the packet which consigns every new-born effort to oblivion

Yet, notwithstanding the republic of letters bangs at present so feebly together-though those friendships which once promoted literary fame seem now to be discontinued-though every writer who now draws the quill seems to arm at profit, as well as applause,-many among them are probably laying in stores for immortality, and are provided with a sufficient stock of reputation to last the whole journey

As I was indulging these reflections, in order to eke out the present page. I could not avoid pursuing the metaphor of going a journey in my imagination, and formed the following Reverse, too wild for allegory, and too regular for a dream

I fancied myself placed in a yard of a large inn, in which there was an infinite number of waggons and stage-conches, attended by fellows who either invited the company to take their places, or were busied in packing their baggage Each vehicle had its inscription, showing the place of its destination one I could read, The Pleasure Stage Coach, on another, The Waggon of Industry, on a third, The Vanity Whim, and on a fourth, The Landau of Riches I had some inclination to step into each of these, one after another; but, I know not by what means, I passed them by, mnd at last fixed my eye upon a small carriage, berlin fashion, which seemed the most convenient vehicle at a distance in the world, and upon my nearer approach found it to be The Fame Machine

I instantly made up to the coachman, whom I found to be an affable and seemingly good-natured fellow He informed me, that he had but a few days ago returned from the Temple of Fame, to which he had been carrying Addison, Swift, Pope, Steele, Congreye, and Colley Cibber, that they made but indifferent company by the way, and that he once or twice was going to empty his berlin of the whole cargo: "However," says he, "I got them all safe home, with no other damage than a black eye, which Colley gave Mr Pope, and am now returned for another coachful "-" If that be all, friend," said I, "and if you are in want of company, I'll make one with all my heart Open the door. I hope the machine rides easy "-" Oh, for that, siz, extremely easy." But still keeping the door snut, and measuring me with his eye, "Pray, sir, have you no luggage? You seem to be a good-natured sort of gentleman , but I don't find you have got any luggage, and I never permit any to travel with me but such as have something valuable to pay for coach-hue" Examining my pockets, I own I was not a little disconcerted at this unexpected rebuff, but considering that I carried a number of the Bre under my arm, I was resolved to open it in his eyes, and dazzle him with the splendour of the page. He read the title and contents, however, without any emotion, and assured me he had never heard of it before "In short, friend," and he, now loing all his former respect, "you must not come in I expect better presengers, but as you seem a harmless creatine, pethaps, if there be room left, I may let you ride a while for charity."

I now took my stand by the corchinan at the door, and since I could not command a sent, was resolved to be as neeful as possible, and carn by my assiduty what I could not by my ment. The next that presented for a place was a most whomseld figure indeed. He was hung round with papers of his own composing, not unlike those who sing ballads in the streets, and came dancing up to the door with all the confidence of instant admittance The volubility of his motion and address prevented my being able to read more of his warge throat the word In-pector, which was written in great letterat the top of some of the paper. He opened the corch does himself without any coumony, and was just shipping in, when the co-chman, with as little cuttonny, pulled him back. Our figure section perfectly angly at this tender, and demanded gentleman's entisfaction. "Lord, sir!" replied the corchain, "instead of proper luggage, by your bulk you seem loaded for a West India voyage. You are big enough, with all your papers, to crack twenty stage-conches. Excuse me, indeed, sir, for you must not enter" Our figure new begin to expostulate, he assured the coachman, that though his biggage seemed so hulky, it was perfectly light, and that he would be contented with the smillest coner of soom But Jehu was inflexible, and the carrier of the Inspectors was sent to dance back again, with all his papers fluttering in the wind We expected to have no more trouble from this quarter, when, in a few minutes, the same figure changed his appearance, like harlequin upon the stage, and with the same confidence again made his approaches, diessed in lace, and carrying nothing but a nosegay. Upon coming nearer, he thrust the nosegay to the coachman's nose, grasped the hrass, and seemed now resolved to enter by violence I found the struggle soon begin to grow hot, and the coachman, who was a little old, unable to continue the contest, so, in order to ingratiate myself, I stepped in to his assistance, and our united efforts sent our literary Proteus, though worsted, unconquered still, clear off, dancing a rigadoon, and smelling to his own nosegay

The person who after him appeared as candidate for a place in the stage came up with an air not quite so confident, but somewhat, however, theatrical . and, instead of entering, made the coachman a very low how, which the other returned, and desired to see his baggage; upon which he instantly produced some farces, a tragedy, and other miscellany productions The coachman, casting his eye upon the cargo, assured him, at present he could not possibly have a place, but hoped in time he might aspire to one, as he seemed to have read in the book of nature, without a careful perusal of which none ever found entrance at the Temple of Fame. "What!" replied the disappointed poet, "shall my tragedy, in which I have vindicated the cause of liberty and virtue "-" Follow nature," returned the other, "and never expect to find lasting fame by topics which only please from their popularity. Had you been first in the cause of freedom, or praised in virtue more than an empty name, it is possible you might

ſΙ

ñ

This was a very grave personage, whom at some distance I took for one of the most reserved, and even disagreeable, figures I had seen, but as he approached his appearance improved, and when I could distinguish him thoroughly, I perceived that, in spite of the sevolity of his brow, he had one of the most good-natured countenances that could be imagined Upon coming to open the stage door, he lifted a parcel of folios into the seat before him, but our inquisitorial coachman at once shoved them out "What I not take in my Dictionary?" exagain claimed the other in a rage "Be patient, su," replied the coachman . "I have drove a coach, man and boy, these two thousand years, but I do not remember to have carried above one dictionary during the whole time That little book which I perceive peeping from one of your pockets, may I presume to ask what it contains?"-" A mere trifle," replied the author, "it is called the Rambler" -"The Rambler!" says the coachman "I beg, sir, you'll take your place, I have heard our ladies in the court of Apollo frequently mention it with lapture, and Cho, who happens to be a little grave, has been heard to prefer it to the Spectator, though others have observed, that the reflections, by being refined, sometimes become minute" This grave gentleman was scarcely seated, when another, whose appearance was something more modern, seemed willing to enter, yet afraid to ask He carried in his hand a hundle of essays, of which the coachman was curious enough to inquire the contents "These," replied the gentleman, "are rhapsoches against the religion of my country." -"And how can you expect to come into my coach, after thus choosing the wrong side of the question?" -" Ay, but I am right," replied the other, "and if you give me leave, I shall, in a few minutes, state the argument "-"Right or wrong," said the coach man, "he who disturbs religion is a blockhead, and he shall never travel in a coach of mine"-" If, then," said the gentleman, mustering up all his courage, "if I am not to have admittance as an essayist, I hope I shall not be repulsed as an historian; the last volume of my history met with applause"-" Yes," replied the coachman, "but I have heard only the first approved at the Temple of Fame, and as I see you have it about you, enter, without farther ceremony." My attention was now diverted to a crowd who were pushing forward a person that seemed more inclined to the Stage-coach of Riches, but hy their means he was driven forward to the same machine, which he, however, seemed heartily to despise Impelled, however, by then solicitations, he steps up, flourishing a voluminous history, and demanding admittance "Sn; I have formerly heard your name mentioned," says the coachman, "but never as an historian. Is there no other work upon which you may claim a place?" -"None," replied the other, "except a romance, but this is a work of too trifling a nature to claim future attention "-" You mistake," says the inquisitor, "a well-written romance is no such easy task as is generally imagined. I remember formerly to have carried Cervantes and Segrais; and if you tlunk fit, you may enter"

[]

ġ

extraordinary occasion, when instoid of agreeable or entertaining dialogue, I found them grumbling at each other, and each seemed discontented with his Strange! thought I to myself, that companions they who are thus born to enlighten the world, should still preserve the narrow prejudices of childhood, and, by disagreeing, make even the highest ment ridiculous Were the learned and the wise to unite against the dunces of society, instead of sometimes siding into opposite parties with them, they might throw a lustre upon each other's reputition, and teach every rank of subordinate ment, if not to admine, at least not to avow dislike In the midst of these reflections I perceived the

GOLDSMITTPS ESSAYS

might be the conversation that passed, upon this

İΙ

coachman, unmindful of me, had now mounted the Several were approaching to be taken in whose pretonsions I was sonsible were very just, I therefore desired him to step, and take in more passengers but he replied, as he had now mounted the hox, it would be improper to come down, but that he should take them all, one after the other, when he should return So he drove away, and for myself, as I could not get in, I mounted behind, in order to hear the conversation on the way,

IT.

ON THE INSTABILITY OF WORLDLY GRANDEUR FROM TRE BEL! No 6

An alchouse keeper near Ishngton, who had long lived at the sign of the French King, upon the commencement of the last war with France, pulled down his old sign and put up the Queen of Hungary, Under the influence of her red face and golden sceptre, he continued to sell ale till she was no longer the favourite of his customers, he changed her therefore, some time ago, for the King of Prussia, who may probably be changed in turn for the next great man that shall be set up for vulgar admiratinn

Our publican in this imitates the great exactly, who deal out their figures, one after the other, to the gazing clowd heneath them. When we have sufficiently wondered at one, that is taken in, and another exhibited in its 100m, which seldom holds its station long, for the mob are ever bleased with variety

I must own I have such an indifferent opinion of the vulgar, that I am ever led to suspect that ment which raises then shout; at least I am certain to find those great and sometimes good men, who find satisfaction in such acclamations, made worse by it . and history has too frequently taught me, that the head which has grown this day giddy with the loar of the million has the very next been fixed upon a pole

As Alexander VI was entering a little town in the neighbourhood of Rome, which had just been evacuated by the enemy, he perceived the townsmen busy in the market-place in pulling down from a gibbet a figure which had been designed to represent himself There were also some knocking down a neighbouring statue of one of the Oisini family, with whom he was at war, in order to put Alexander's effigy, when taken down, in its place It is possible a man who knew less of the world would have condemned the adulation of those barefaced flatterers, but Alexander seemed pleased at then zeal, and, turning to Borgia his son, said with a smile. Vides me file, quam lore discremen patibulum inter et statuam -" You see, my son, the small difference between a gibbet and a statue" If the great could be taught any lesson, this might serve to teach them upon how weak a foundation thou glory stands, which is built upon popular applause, for as such piouse what seems like merit, they as quickly condemn what has only the appearance of guilt

ſπ

ពេ

Popular glory is a perfect coquette her lovers must toil, feel every inquietude, indulge every captice, and perhaps at last be pilted into the bargam True glory, on the other hand, resembles a woman of sense her admirers must play no tracks; they feel no great analety, for they are sure in the end of being rewarded in proportion to their ment. When Swift used to appear in public, he generally had the mob shouting in his train "Plague take these fools!" he would say "how much joy hught ill this biwling give my Lord Mayor ! "

We have seen those virtues which have, while

n] INSTABILITY OF WORLDLY GRANDEUR IN

living, retired from the public eye, generally transmitted to posterity as the truest objects of admiration and maise. Perhaps the character of the late Duke of Mariborough may one day be set-up, even show that of his more talked-piedecessor; since an assemblage of all the mild and amirble virtues is far superior to those vulgarly called the great ones. I must be pardoned for this short tribute to the memory of a man who, while living, would as much dotest to receive anything that were the appearance of flattery, as I should to offer it.

I know not how to turn so are a subject out of the beaten read of commonplace, except by illustrating it rather by the assistance of my memory then my judgment, and, unstead of making reflections, by telling a story.

A Chinese who had long studied the works of Confucius, who knew the characters of fourteen thousand words, and could read a great part of every book that came in his way, once took it into his head to travel into Europe, and observe the customs of a people whom he thought not very much inferior to his own countryman in the arts of refining upon every pleasure Upon his arrival at Amsterdam, his passion for letters naturally led him to a bookseller's shop, and, as he could speak a httle Dutch, he civilly asked the bookseller for the works of the immortal Ihxofou The bookseller assured him he had never heard the book mentioned before "What! have you never heard of that immortal poet?" returned the other, much surprised, "that light of the eyes, that favourite of kings, that iose of perfection! I suppose you know nothing of the immortal Fipsishli, second cousin to the moon?"—"Alas!" cries our traveller, "to what purpose, then, has one of these fasted to death, and the other offered himself up as a sacrifice to the Tartarean enemy, to gain a renown which has never travelled beyond the precincts of China!" There is scarcely a village in Europe, and not one university, that is not thus formished with its little great men The head of a petty corporation, who opposes the designs of a prince who would tyrannically force his subjects to save their best clothes for Sundays-the puny pedant who finds one undiscovered property in the polype, describes un unheeded process in the skeleton of a mole, and whose mind, like his microscope, perceives nature only in detail-the rhymer who makes smooth verses, and parats to our imagination when he should speak to our hearts-all equally fancy themselves walking forward to immortality, and desire the crowd behind them to look on The crowd takes them at their word Patriot, philosopher, and poet are shouted in their train Where was there ever so much ment seen I no times so important as our own ages yet unhoin shall gaze with wonder and applause! To such music the important pigmy moves forward, bustling and swelling, and aptly compared to a puddle in a storm

I have lived to see generals who once had crowds halloong after them wherever they went, who were heptaised by newspapers and magazines, those echoes of the voice of the vulgar, and jot they have long sunk into mented obscarity, with scarcely even an $_{\rm Im}$ epitaph left to flatter. A few years ago the herring fishery employed all Grub Street, it was the topic in every coffee-house, and the burden of every ballad We were to drag up oceans of gold from the bottom of the sea, we were to supply all Europe with herrings upon our own terms At present we bear no more of all this We have fished up very little gold that I can learn; nor do we furnish the world with herrings as was expected Let us want but a few years longer, and we shall find all our expectations an herring fishery

III.

CUSTOM AND LAWS COMPARED FROM 'THE BEE.' No. 7.

What, say some, can give us a more contemptable idea of a large state, than to find it mostly governed by custom, to have few written laws, and no boundaries to mark the jurisdiction hetween the senate and the people? Among the number who speak in this manner is the great Montesquieu, who asserts that every nation is free in proportion to the number of its written laws, and seems to hint at a despotic and arbitiary conduct in the present King of Prussia. who has abridged the laws of his country into a short compass

As Tacitus and Montesquieu bappen to differ in sentiment upon a subject of so much importance (for the Roman expressly asserts that the state is generally vicious in proportion to the number of its laws), it will not be amiss to examine it a little more minutely, and see whether a state which, like England, is buildened with a multiplicity of written laws, or which, like Switzerland, Geneva, and some other republics, is governed by custom and the determination of the judge, is best.

And to prove the superiority of custom to written law we shall at least find history conspiring tom, or the traditional observance of the practice of their forefathers, was what directed the Romans as well in their public as private determinations Custom was appealed to in pronouncing sentence against a criminal, where part of the formulary was more majorum So Sallust, speaking of the expulsion of Taroun, says mutate more, and not lege mutatd, and Virgil, pacisque imponero moiem So that, in those times of the empire in which the people ietained their liberty, they were governed by custom , when they sank into oppression and tyranny, they were restrained by new laws, and the laws of tradition were abolished As getting the ancients on our side is half a

As getting the american on our size is man avietory, it will not be arms to fortify the argument with an observation of Chrysostom's "That the enslaved are the fittest to be governed by laws, and free men by custom" Custom particles of the nature of parental injunction, it is kept by the people themselves and observed with a willing obedience. The observance of it must, therefore, be a mank of free dom, and coming originally to a state from the reverenced founders of its liberty, will be an encouragement and assistance to it in the defence of that blessing but a conquered people, a nation of slaves, must pietend to none of this freedom, or these happy distinctions, having, by degeneracy, tions, their masters will in policy take the forfeiture, and the fixing a conquest must be done by giving laws, which may every moment serve to remind the people enslaved by their conquerors, nothing being more dangerous than to trust a late subdued people with old customs, that presently upbraid their degeneracy, and provoke them to revolt

The wisdom of the Roman republic in their veneration for custom, and backwardness to introduce a new law, was perhaps the cause of their long continuance, and of the vutues of which they have set the world so many examples But to show in what that wisdom consists, it may be proper to observe that the benefit of new written laws is merely confined to the consequences of their observance, but customary laws, keeping up a voneration for the founders, engage men in the imitation of their virtues as well as policy To this may be ascribed the religious regard the Romans paid to their forefathers' memory, and their adhering for so many ages to the practice of the same virtues, which nothing contributed more to effare than the introduction of a voluminous body of new laws over the neck of venerable custom

The simplicity, conciseness, and antiquity of custom give an an of majesty and immutability that mepnes and and veneration, but new laws are too apt to be columnous, perplexed, and indeterminate, whence must necessarily arise neglect, contempt, and ignorance

As every human institution is subject to gross imperfections, so has must necessarily be liable to the same inconveniences, and their defects soon reports, which may be termed the acts of judges, are every day becoming more voluminous, and loading the subject with new penalties

Laws ever increase m number and severity, until they at length are stramed so taght as to break themselves. Such was the case of the latter emprewhose laws were at length become so strict, that barbarous invaders did not bring servitude but liberty.

IV.

An Account of the Augustan Age of England From 'The Ble,' No S

The history of the rise of language and learning is calculated to gratify curricity nather than to satisfy the understanding. An account of that period only when language and learning arrived at its highest perfection is the most conducive to real improvement, since it at once raises emulation and directs to the proper objects. The age of Leo X in Italy is confessed to be the Augustan age with them the French writers seem agreed to give the same appellation to that of Lous XIV but the English are yet undetermined with respect to themselves.

Some have looked upon the writers in the times of Queen Elizabeth as the true standard for future innitation, others have descended to the lega of James I , and others still lower, to that of Charles II Were I to be permitted to offer an opinion upon this subject, I should readily give my rote for the lega of Queen Anne, or some years before that period. It was then that taste was united to gennis, and as before our writers charmed with their strength of thinking, so then they pleased with strength and grace united. In that period of British glory, though no writer attracts our attention singly, yet, like stars lost in each other's brightness, they have cost such a lustro upon the age in which they hved that their minutest trans actions will be attended to by posterity with a greater eagerness than the most important occurrences of even empires which have been transacted in greater obsourity.

At thit period their seemed to be a just balance between patronage and the press Before it, men were little exteemed whose only ment was gamen, and since, men who can predently be content to catch the public, are certain of hving without dependence But the writers of the period of which I am speaking, were sufficiently exteemed by the great, and not rewarded enough by booksellers to set them above dependence Fame, consequently, then was the truest road to happiness, a sadulous attention to the mechanical business of the day makes the pre-ent never-fulling resource

The age of Chules II, which our countrymen term the age of wit and immorality, produced some writers that at once seaved to improve our language and courupt our hearts. The king inmeelf land a large shade of knowledge and some wit, and his counties were generally men who had been brought up in the school of affliction and experience. For this reason, when the sunshine of their fortune returned, they gave too great a loose to pleasure, and language was by them entitivated only as a mode of elegance. Hence it became more enervated, and was

IV THE AUGUSTAN AGE OF ENGLAND. dashed with quaintnesses, which gave the public writings of those times a very illiheral an. L'Estrange, who was by no means so bad a writer as some have represented him, was sunk in party faction, and having generally the worst side of the argument, often had recourse to scolding, pertness, and, consequently, a vulgarity that discovers itself even in his more liberal compositions. He was the first writer who regularly enlisted himself under the banners of a party for pay, and fought for it, through right and wrong, for upwards of forty literary campaigns This intrepidity gained him the esteem of Cromwell himself, and the papers he wrote even just before the Revolution, almost with the rope about his neck, have his usual characters of impudence and perseverance That he was a standard writer cannot he disowned, because a great many very eminent authors formed their style by his. But his standard was far from heing a just one, though, when party considerations are set aside, he certainly was possessed of elegance, ease, and perspicuity Dryden, though a great and undisputed genius, had the same cast as L'Estrange Even his plays discover him to be a party man, and the same principle infects his style in subjects of the lightest nature, but the English tongue, as it stands at present, is greatly his debtor. He first gave it regular harmony, and discovered its latent powers It was his pen that formed the Congreves, the Priors, and the Addisons, who succeeded him, and had it not been for Dryden, we never should have known a Pope, at least in the meridian lustre he now displays But Dryden's excellences as a writer were not confined to poetry alone There is in his prose 22

19

of bim in other respects

IV.

The time seems to be at hand when justice will be done to Mr Cowley's prose as well as poetical writings, and though his friend Dr Sprat, Bishop of Rochester, in his diction falls far short of the abilities for which he has been celebrated, yet there is sometimes a happy flow in his periods, something that looks like eloquence The style of his successor. Atterbury, has been much commended by his friends, which always happens when a man distinguishes himself in party, but there is in it nothing extraordinary Even the speech which he made for himself at the har of the House of Lords, before he was sent into exile, is void of eloquence, though it has been oried up by his friends to such a degree that his enemies have suffered it to pass uncensured The philosophic manner of Lord Shaftesbury's writing is nearer to that of Cicero than any English author has yet arrived at, but perhaps had Ocero written in English, his composition would have greatly exceeded that of our countryman diction of the latter is beautiful, but such beauty as upon nearer inspection carries with it evident symptoms of affectation This has been attended with very disagreeable consequences. Nothing is so easy to copy as affect thon, and his Lordship's rank and fame have procured him more imitators in Britain than any other writer I know, all futhfully preserving his blemishes, but unhappily not one of his beauties Mr Trenchard and Dr Davenant were political writers of great abilities in diction, and then pamphlets are now standards in that way of writing They were followed by Dean Swift, who, though in other respects far their superior, never could arise to that manhiness and clearness of diction in political writing for which they were so justly

IV THE AUGUSTAN AGE OF ENGLAND

famous morals, never

They were all of them exceeded by the late Lord Bolingbroke, whose strength lay in that province, for as a philosopher and a critic he was ill qualified, being destitute of virtue for the one, and of learning for the other. His writings against Sii Robert Walpole are incomparably the best part of his works The personal and perpetual antipathy he had for that family, to whose places be thought his own abilities had a right, gave a glow to his style, and an edge to his manner, that never yet have been equalled in political writing. His misfortunes and disappointments gave his mind a turn which his firends mistook for philosophy, and at one time of his life he had the art to impose the same belief upon some of his enemies. His idea of a natriot king, which I reckon (as indeed it was) amongst his writings against Sir Robert Walpole, is a masterpiece of diction Even in his other works his style is excellent, but where a man either does not or will not understand the subject he writes on. there must always he a deficiency In politics, he

Mr Addison, for a happy and natural style, will be always an honour to Tautish literature. His action, indeed, wants strength, but it is equal to all the subjects he undertakes to handle, as he never (at least in his finished works) attempts any-was generally master of what he undertook; in

thing either in the argumentative or demonstrative way

Through Six Brahard Steele's reputation as a public son, job, ofter their intrinsicy was formed. Steele sank in his ment as an author. This was not coming to much to the evident superiority on the part of Addison, no to the unnodural efforts which Steele and to equal or echips him. This emulation destroyed that gonumn flow of diction which is dissoverable in all his famer compositions.

Whilst their writings engaged attention and the favour of the public, rettented but unsuccessful endearours were made towards forming a grammat of the English language. The authors of those effects went upon wrong parcepte. Instend of endearousing to retench the absurdates of our language, and bringing it to a certain criterion, their grammats were no other than a collection of rules attempting to naturalise these absurdates, and bring thou under a regular spaces.

Somewhat effectual, however, might have been done towards fixing the strudard of the Doghsh language, had it not been for the spart of party for both Wings and Toures Is may ambitious to stand at the head of so great a design, the Queen's death imposed before any plan of an scademy could be resolved on.

Meanwhile, the necessity of such an institution became every day more apparent. The periodical and political writes, who then swarmed, adopted the very worst impact of LES trange, till not only all decease, but all propriety, of language was letin the nation. Leshe, a part writes, with some witIV) THE AUGUSTAN AGE OF ENGLAND and learning, insulted the government every week with the grossest abuse. His style and manner, both of which were illiberal, were imitated by Bidpath, Defoe, Dunton, and others of the opposite party, and Toland pleaded the cause of atheism and immorbility in much the same strain: his subject seemed to debase his diction, and he ever failed most in one, when he give most hierarchicus in the other

25

Towards the end of Queen Anne's reign some of the greatest men in England devoted then time to party, and then a much better manner obtained in political writing. Mr Walpole, Mr. Addi-on, Mr Manuwaring, Mr Steele, and many members of both houses of Parliament, drew then pens for the Whigs, but they seem to have been overmatched, though not in argument, yet in writing, by Bolingbioke, Prior, Swift, Arbuthnot, and the other friends of the opposite party. They who oppose a ministry have always a better field for ridicule and reproof than they who defend it.

Since that period our writers have either been

Since that period our writers have either been encouraged above their menits or below them. Some who were possessed of the meanest abilities acquired the highest preferents, while others who seemed born to reflect a lustre upon their age perished by want or neglect. More, Savage, and Amherst were possessed of great abilities, yet they were suffered to feel all the misenies that usually attend the ingenious and the impendent—that attend men of strong passions, and no phlegmatic reserve in their command.

At present, were a man to attempt to improve his fortune or increase his friendship by poetry, he would soon feel the anxiety of disappointment. The literature but that alone

26

I am at a loss whether to ascribe this falling off of the public to a vierous taste in the post of in them Perhaps both are to be reprehended The poet, either duly didactic, gives us rules which might appear abstruse even in a system of ethics, or triflingly volatile, writes upon the most unworthy subjects, content, if he can give music instead of sense, contert, if he can paint to the unagination without any desires or endeavours to affect the public, therefore, with justice, discard such empty sound, which has nothing but a jingle, or, what is worse, the unmusical flow of blank verse, to recommend it The late method, also, into which our newspapers have fallen, of giving an epitome of every new publication, must greatly damp the writer's genius He finds himself, in this case, at the mercy of men who have neither abilities nor learning to distinguish his merit. He finds his own composition mixed with the soidid trash of every daily scribbles There is a sufficient specimen given of his work to abate curiosity, and yet so mutilated as to render him contemptible. His first, and perhaps his second, work by these means sink, among the crudities of the age, into oblivion Fame, he finds, begins to turn her hack he therefore flies to profit, which invites him, and he eniols himself in the lists of dulness and of availce for life

Yet there are still among us men of the greatest abilities, and who, in some puts of learning, have surpassed then predecessors Justice and friendship might here impel me to speak of names which will shine out to all posterity, but prudence restrains me from what I should otherwise eagerly embrace Envy might rise against every honoured name I should mention, since scarcely one of them has not those who are his enemies, or those who despise him, &c.

٧.

CAROLAN · THE IRISH BARD. MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS

THERE can be perhaps no greater entertainment than to compare the rude Celtre simplicity with modern refinement Books, however, seem incapable of furnishing the parallel, and to be acquainted with the ancient manners of our own encestors, we should endeavour to look for their remains in those countries which, being in some measure retired from an intercourse with other nations, are still untinctured with foreign refinement, language, or breeding.

The Irish will satisfy cornesity in this respect preferably to all other nations I have seen. They, in several parts of the country, still adhere to their amount language, dress, furniture, and superastitions, several enstones exist among them that still speak their original, and, in some respects, Cascal's description of the ancient Britons is applicable to these

Their builds, in particular, are stall held in great veneration among them, those traditional heralds are invited to every funeral, in order to fill up the intervals of the howl with their songs and haips. In these they reheaves the actions of the ancestors of the deceased beward the bondage of their country under the English government, and generally conclude with advising the young men and madens to make the hest use of their time, for they will soon, for all their present bloom, be stretched under the table, like the dead body before them

Of all the bards this country ever produced, the last and the greatest was Canolan field Dline. He was at once a poet, a musician, a composer and sing his own verses to his hip. The original native never mention his name without rapture, both his poetry and music they have by heart, and even some of the English themselves, who have been transplanted there, find his music extremely pleasing A song beginning.

"O'Ronrke's noble fare will no'er be forgot,"

translated by Dean Swift, is of his composition, which, though perhaps by this means the best known of his pieces, is yet by no means the most deserving His songs in general may be compared to those of Pindur, as they have frequently the same flights of imagination, and are composed (I do not say written, for he could not write) merely to flatter some man of fortune upon some excellence of the same kind In these one man is praised for the excellence of his stable, as in Pindar, another for his hospitality, a third for the beauty of his wife and children, and a fourth for the antiquity of his family. Whenever any of the original natives of distinction were assembled at feasting or revelling, Carolan was generally there, where he was always ready with his haip to celebrate their praises He seemed by nature formed for his profession; for as he was born blind, so also he was possessed of a most astonishing memory, and a facetious turn of thinking, which gave his entertainers infinite satisfaction Being once at the house of an Inish nobleman, where there was a musician present who was eminent in the profession, Carolan immediately challenged him to a trial of skill. To carry the jest forward, his lordship persuaded the musician to accept the challerge, and he accordingly played over on his fiddle the fifth concerto of Vivaldi Carolan, immediately taking up his harp, played over the whole piece after him, without missing a note, though he had never heard it before, which produced some surprise, but their astonishment increased, when he assured them he could make a concerto in the same taste himself, which he instantly composed, and that with such spirit and elegance, that it may compare (for we have it still) with the finest compositions of Italy

His death was not less remarkable than his life Homei was never more fond of a glass than he, he would drink whole pints of usquebaugh, and, as he used to think, without any ill consequence. His intemperance, however, in this respect, at length brought on an inemable disorder, and when just at the point of death, he called for a cup of his beloved liquor. Those who were stunding round him, surprised at the demand, endearoused to persuade him to the contrary; but he prissted, and when the bowl was brought to him attempted to drink, but could not, wherefore, giving away the bowl, he observed, with a smile, that it would be hard if two such friends as he and the cup should part at least without kissing, and then expired.

the deceased, bevail the bondage of their country under the English government, and generally conclude with advising the young men and maldest to make the best use of their time, for they will som, for all their present bloom, be stretched under the table, like the dead body before them.

Of all the birds this country ever produced, the last and the greatest was Carotan rate Bland. He was at once a poet, a measuran, a composen and sumplies own verses to his herp. The original natives never mention has name without raptive; both his poetry and misso they have by heart, and ever some of the English themselves, who have been tanisplanted there, find his music extremely pleasing A sing beginning.

"O'Ronike's noble fare will ne'er be forgot,"

translated by Dean Swift, is of his composition, which, though perhaps by this means the best known of his pieces, is yet by no means the most deserving His songs in general may be compared to those of Pindar, as they have frequently the sum? dights of imagination, and are composed (I do not say written, for he could not write) merely to flatter some man of fortune upon some excellence of the same kind. In these one man is praised for the excellence of his stable, as in Pindar, another for his hospitality, a third for the beauty of his wife and children, and a fourth for the antiquity of his family Whenever any of the original natives of distinction were assembled at feating or lovelling Carolan was generally there, where he was always really with his loup to celebrate their praises. He seemed by nature formed for his profession, for as he was born blind, so also he was possessed of a most astonishing memory, and a facetious turn of thinking, which gave his entertainers infinite satisfaction Being once at the house of an Irish nobleman, where there was a musician present who was emment in the profession, Carolan unmediately challenged him to a trial of skill. To carry the jest forward, his lordship persuaded the musician to scept the challenge, and he accordingly played over on his fiddle the fifth concerto of Vivaldi Carolan, immediately taking up his harp, played over the whole piece after him, without missing a note, though he had never heard it before, which pro duced some surprise, but then astonishment increased, when he assured them he could make a concerto in the same taste himself, which he instantly composed, and that with such spirit and elegance, that it may compare (for we have it still) with the finest compositions of Italy. His death was not less remarkable than his life Homer was never more fond of a glass than he, he would druk whole pints of usquebaugh, and, as he used to think, without any ill consequence. His intemperance, however, in this respect, at length brought on an incurable desorder; and when just at the point of death, he called for a cup of his beloved liquor Those who were standing round him, surprised at the demand, endeavoured to persuade him to the contrary, but he persisted, and when the bowl was brought to him attempted to dunk. but could not, wherefore, giving away the bowl, he observed, with a smile, that it would be hard if two such friends as he and the cup should part at least without kissing, and then expired.

VT.

NATIONAL CONCORD MISSELLANIOUS ESSAIS, NO 15

I TARE the liberty to communicate to the public of few loose thoughts upon a subject which, though often handled, has not yet in my epinion been fully discussed.—I mean initional concord, or unanimity, which in this kingdom has been generally considered as a bare possibility that existed nowhere but in speculation. Such an umon is perhaps neither to be expected nor wished for in a country whose liberty depends rather upon the genues of the people than upon any precautions which they have taken in a constitutional way for the guard and preservation of this mestimable blessing.

There is a very honest gentleman with whom I nave been acquainted these thirty years, during which there has not been one speech uttered against the ministry in parliament, nor struggle at an elechon for a burgess to serve in the House of Commons, nor a pamphlet published in opposition to any measure of the administration, nor even a private censure passed in his hearing upon the misconduct of any person concerned in public affairs, but he is immediately alarmed, and loudly exclaims against ruch fretious doings, in order to set the people by the cars together at such a delicate juncture any other time," says he, " such opposition might not be improper, and I don't question the facts that are alleged, but at this cases, sar, to inflame the nation—the man deserves to be punished as a traitor to his country" In a word, according to this gentle

31

at any time these thirty years, and were it possible for him to live another century, he would never find any period at which a man might with safety impugn the infallibility of a minister

The case is no more than this: my honest friend has invested his whole fortune in the stocks, on Government security, and trembles at every whiff of popular discontent Were every British subject of the same tame and timid disposition, Magna Charta would be wholly disregarded by an amhitious prince, and the liberties of England expire without a grean Opposition, when restrained within due bounds, is the salubrious gale that ventilates the opinions of the people, which might otherwise starnate into the most abject submission. It may be said to purify the atmosphere of politics. to dispel the gross vapours raised by the influence of ministerial artifice and corruption, until the constitution, like a mighty rock, stands full disclosed to the view of every individual who dwells within the shade of its protection Even when this gale blows with augmented violence, it generally tends to the advantage of the commonwealth it wakes the apprehension, and consequently arouses all the faculties of the pilot at the helm, who redoubles his vigilance and caution, exerts his utmost skill, and, becoming acquainted with the nature of the navigation, in a little time learns to soit his canvas to the roughness of the ser and the tum of the vessel. Without these intervening storms of opposition to exercise his faculties, he would become enervated, negligent, and presumptuous, and in the wantonness of his power, trusting to some decentful calm, perhaps hazard a step that would wreck the constitution Yet there is a measure in all things A moderate frost will fertilise the globe with nitrous particles, and destroy the eggs of permicious insects that prey upon the fancy of the year but if this first increases in severity and duration, it will chill the seeds, and even freeze up the roots of vegetables . it will check the bloom, mp the buds, and blast all the promise of the spring The vernal breeze that drives the fog before it, that brushes the colowebs from the boughs, that fans the air, and fosters vegetation, if augmented to a tempest will strip the leaves, overthrow the ties, and desolate the garden The auspicious gale before which the trim vessel ploughs the bosom of the sea, while the marmers are kept alert in duty and in spirits, if converted into a hurricane, overwhelms the crew with terror and confusion The sails are ient, the coidage cincked, the masts give way; the master eyes the havee with mute despur, and the vessel founders in the storm Opposition, when confined within its proper channels, sweeps away those beds of soil and banks of sand which corruptive power had gathered, but when it overflows its banks, und delnges the plam, its course is marked by ruin and devistation

The opposition necessary in a free state, like that of Great Britain, is not at all meompatible with that national concord which sught to unite the people on emergencies in which the general safety is at stake it is the jedousy of patriotam, not the rancour of party—the wainth of candour, not the virulence of late—a transient dispute among friends, not in implicable feud that admits of no reconciliation.

The history of all ages teems with the fatal effects of internal discord, and were history and tradition annihilated, common sense would plannly point out the mischiefs that must arise from want of harmony and national union. Every schoolboy can have recourse to the fable of the rods, which, when united in a bundle, no strength could bend, but when separated into single twigs, a child could break with ease.

VII

Asem the Man-Hater, or, A Vindication of the Wisdom of God in the Moral Government of the World, an Eastern Tale Miscellarious Essats, No. 32

Where Tauris lifts its lead above the stoim, and presents nothing to the sight of the distant traveller but a prespect of nodding rocks, falling torrents, and all the variety of tiemendous nature; on the bleak boson of this frightful mountain, secluded from society, and detesting the ways of men, hved Asem the man-later

Asen had spent his youth with men, had shared in their amutements, and had been trught to love this fellow-cretures with the most ardent affection, but, from the tenderness of las disposition, he extracted all his fortune in eleving the wants of the distressed. The petitione never such is vary triveller never prised his door, he only desisted from doing good when he had no longer the rower of relieving.

For a fortune thus spent in benevolence he exrected a grateful return from those he had formerly neheved, and made his application with confidence of redress, the ungrateful world soon grew weary of his importantly, for pity is but a short lived pression. He soon, therefore, began to view mankind in a very different light from that in which he had before beheld them, he perceived a thousand vices he had never before suspected to exist, wherever he tained never before suspected to exist, wherever he tained ingratitude, dissimilation, and treachery contailuted to increase his detestation of them. Resolved, therefore, to continue no longer in a world which he hated, and which reprid his detestation with contempt, he retired to this region of sterility, in order to broad over his resentance in solitade, and converse with the only honest heart he knew—namely, with his own

A cave was his only shelter from the inclemency of the weather, finite, gathered with difficulty from the mountain's side, his only food, and his dunk was fetched, with danger and toil, from the headlong torient. In this manner he lived, sequestered from society, passing the hours in meditation, and sometimes exulting that he was able to live independent of his fellow-rectures.

At the foot of the mountain an extensive lake displayed its glassy become, reflecting on its broad surface the impending horrors of the mountain. To this capacious mirror he would sometimes descend, and, redining on its steep banks, east an eager look on the smooth expanse that lay before him. "How beautiful," he often creed, "is Nature! How levely even in her wildest scenes! How finely continued is the level plum that his beneath me with you will pile that hides its tremendous head in clouds! But the beauty of these scenes is no way comparable with their utility, honce an hundred rivers are supplied, which distribute health and verdure to the various countries through which they flow. Every part of the universe is beautiful, just, and wass; but man, vile man, is a solecism in Nature, the only monster in the creation. Tempests and whill winds have their use; but vicious, ungrateful man is a blot in the fair page of universal beauty. Why was I born of that detested species, whose vices are almost a repreach to the wisdom of the divine Creator? Were men entirely free from vice, all would be unformity, halmony, and order. A world of moral rectitude should be the result of a porfect moral agent. Why, why thou, O Alla? must I he thus confined in darkness, doubt, and despars?"

Just as he uttered the word despan, he was going to plunge into the lake beneath him, at once to satisfy his doubts, and put a period to his anxiety, when he perceived a most majestic heing walking on the surface of the water, and approaching the bank on which he stood. So unexpected an object at once checked his purpose, he stopped, contemplated, and fanced he saw something awful and divine in his aspect.

"Son of Adam," ened the Gennus, "stop thy rash purpose, the Father of the Fathful has seen thy pushes, thy integrity, thy museries and hath sent me to afford and administer relief Give me thine land, and follow without trembling whenever I shall lead, in me behold the Genius of Conviction, kept by the great Prophet, to turn from their eners those who go astray, not from curroutly, but a rectified of intention. Follow me and be wise"

Asem immediately descended upon the lake and his guile conducted him along the surface of the water, till, coming near the centre of the lake, they both began to sink, the waters closed over their heads; they descended several hundred fathoms, till Asem, just ready to give up his life as inevitably lost, found himself, with his celestial guide, in an other world, at the bottom of the waters, where human foot had never trod before. His astonishment was beyond description, when he saw a sun like that he had left, a serene sky over his head, and blooming vedure under his feet.

"I plainly perceive your amazement," said the Genius, "but suspend it for a while This world was formed by Alla, at the request, and under the inspection of our great Prophet, who once entertained the same doubts which filled your mind when I found you, and from the consequence of which you were so lately rescued The rational inhahitants of this world are formed agreeable to your own ideas, they are absolutely without vice In other respects it resembles your earth, but differs from it in being wholly inhabited by men who never do wrong If you find this world more agreeable than that you so lately left, you have free permission to spend the remainder of your days in it, but permit me for some time to attend you, that I may silence your doubts, and make you better acquainted with your company and your new habitation."

"A world without vice! Rational beings without immortality!" cried Asem, in a naphure, "I think thee, O Alla! who hast at length head my petitions, thus, thus indeed will produce happiness, ecstasy, and ease Oh, for an immortality, to spend it among men who are meapable of ingratitude, injustice, fraud, violence, and a thousand other crimes that render Society misorable !"

"Cease thine exclamations," replied the Gemus "Look around thee; reflect on overy object and action before us, and communicate to me the result of time observations. Lead wherever you think proper, I shall be your attendant and instructor." Asom and his companion travelled on in silence for some time, the former being entirely lost in astomishment, but at last recovering his former seremity, he could not help observing, that the face of the country bore a near resemblance to that he had left, except that this subterranean world still seemed to retain its primeval valdness.

"Here," cried Asem, "I perceive animals of prey and others that seem only designed for their subsistence, it is the very same in the world over our heads But had I been permitted to instruct our Prophet, I would have removed this defect, and formed no voracious or destructive animals, which only pray on the other parts of the creation "-"Your tenderness for inferior animals is, I find, remarkable," said the Genius, smiling "But, with regard to meaner creatures, this world exactly resembles the other, and, mdeed, for obvious reasons. for the earth can support a more considerable num ber of animals by their thus becoming food for each other, than if they had hved entirely on her vegetable productions. So that animals of different natures thus formed, instead of lessening their multitude, subsist in the greatest number possible But let us hasten on to the inhabited country before us, and see what that offers for instruction"

They soon gained the utmost verge of the forest, and entered the country inhabited by men without vice, and Asem anticipated in idea the rational delight he hoped to experience in such an innocent Society But they had senicely left the confines of the wood, when they beheld one of the inhabitants flying with hasty steps, and terior in his counte nance, from an army of squirrels, that closely pur-"Heavens!" cried Asem, "why does he sued hun fly? What can be fear from animals so contemptable?" He had scarcely spoken, when he perceived two dogs pursuing another of the human species, who with equal terror and haste attempted to avoid them "This," cried Asem to his guide, "is truly surprising, not can I conceive the reason for so strange an action "-" Every species of animals," replied the Genius, " has of late grown very powerful in this country, for the inhabitants, at first, thinking it unjust to use either fraud or force in destroying them, they have insensibly increased, and now frequently tavage then harmless frontiers"

"But they should have been destroyed," crued Asem, "you see the consequence of such neglect" -"Where is, then, that tenderness you so lately expressed for subordinate animals?" roplied the Genius, smiling, "you seem to have forgot that branch of justice "-" I must acknowledge my mistake," 1cturned Asem, "I um now convinced that we must be guilty of tyranny and injustice to the haute acriton, if we would enjoy the world ourselves But let us no longer observe the duty of man to these irrational creatures, but survey their connections with one another"

As they walked farther up the country, the more he was surprised to see no vestiges of handsome vii 1

39

houses, no cities, or any mark of elegant design. His conductor, perceiving his surprise, observed, that the inhabitants of this new world were perfectly content with their ancient simplicity; each had a house, which, though homely, was sufficient to lodge his little family, they were too good to build bouses, which could only increase their own pride, and the envy of the spectators, what they built was for convenience, and not for show "At least, then," sud Asem, "they have neither architects, painters, nor etatuaries in their society, but these are idlo arts, and may be spared However, before I spend much more time here, you should have my thanks for introducing me into the society of some of their wisest men , there is scarce any pleasure to me equal to a refined conversation, there is nothing of which I am so much enamoured as wisdom."-" Wisdom!" replied his instructor, "how ridiculous! We have no wiedom here, for we have no occasion for it, true wisdom is only a knowledge of our own duty, and the duty of others to us, but of what use is such wisdom here? Each intuitively performs what is right in himself, and expects the same from others If by wisdom you should mean vain curiosity and empty speculation, as such pleasures have their origin in vanity, luxury, or avarice, we are tee good to pursue them "-- "All this may be right," says Asem, "but methinks I observe a solitary disposition prevail among the people, each family keeps separately within their own precincts, without society, or without intercourse "-"That indeed is true." replied the other, "here is no established society not should there be any, all secreties are made either through fear or friendship, the people we are among are too good to fear each other, and there are no notives to private friendship, where all are equally meritorious "..." Well, then," and the sceptic, "as I am to spead my time here, if I am to have neither the polite arts, nor vision, nor friendship, in such a wald, I should be glad at least of an easy companion, who may tell me has thoughts, and to whom I may communicate mines "..." And to what purpose should either do this?" says the Genius, "flattery or currosity are vicious motives, and never allowed of here, and wisdom is out of the question."

"Still however," said Asem, "the inhabitants must be happy, each is contented with his own possessions, nor avariciously endeavours to heap up more than is necessary for his own subsistence, each has therefore lessure for pitying those that sland in need of his compassion" He had scarce spoken, when his ears were assaulted with the lamentations of a wietch who sat by the way-side, and in the most deplorable distress seemed gently to murmur at his own misery Asem immediately ran to just select, and found him in the last stage of a consumption. "Strange," cried the son of Adam, "that men who are free from vice should thus suffer so much misery without relief!"-"Be not surprised," said the wreich who was dying, "would it not be the utmost mustice for beings who have only just sufficient to support themselves, and are content with a bure subsistence, to take it from their own mouths to put it into mine! They never are possessed of a single meal more than is necessary, and what is birely necessary cannot be dispensed with "-" They should have been supplied with more than to necessary," oned Asem-"and yet I VII.

contradict my own opinion but a moment before -all is doubt, perplexity, and confusion. Even the want of ingratitude is no virtue here, since they never received a favour They have, however, another excellence yet behind, the love of their country is still, I hope, one of their dailing virtues" -"Peace, Asem," replied the Guardian, with a countenance not less severe than beautiful, "nor forfert all thy pretensions to wisdom, the same selfisb motives by which we prefer our own interests to that of others, induce us to regard our country preferably to that of another Nothing less than universal benevolence is free from vice, and that you see is practised here."-"Strange!" cries the disappointed pilgrim, in an agony of distress, "what sort of a world am I now introduced to? There is scarce a single virtue, but that of temperance, which they practise, and in that they are no way superior to the very brute creation There is scarce an amusement which they enjoy, fortitude, liberality, friendship, wisdom, conversation, and love of country, all are virtues entirely unknown here, thus it seems that to be unacquainted with vice is not to know virtue. Take me, O my Genius 1 back to that very world which I have despised, a world which has Alla for its contriver is much more wisely formed than that which has been projected by Mahomet Ingratitude, contempt, and hatred I can now suffer, for perhaps I have deserved them When I arraigned the wisdom of Providence, I only showed my own ignorance, henceforth let me keep from vice myself, and pity it in others"

He had scarce ended, when the Gemus, assuming an air of terrible complacency, called all his thunders around him, and vanished in a whillwind Asem, astonished at the terror of the cene, looked for his imaginary would; when, casting his eyes around, he perceived himself in the very situation, and in the very place, where he first began to repine and despoir, his right foot bad been just advanced to take the fatal plungs, nor had it been yet withdrawn , so unstantly did Providence starke the senses of truths just imprinted on his soul. He now departed from the water side in tranquillity, and, leaving his bornd mansion, travelled to Segestin, his native city, where he diligently applied himself to commerce, and put in practice that wisdom he had learned in solitude The frugality of a few years soon produced opulence, the number of his domestics increased, his friends came to him from every part of the city, nor d d he receive them with disdain, and a youth of misery was concluded with an old age of elegance, affinence, and ease

VIII

On the Origin of Poetry Miscellaneous Essays, No. 19

The study of polite literature is generally supposed to include all the liberal acts of poetry, painting, sculpture, music, eloquence, and architecture. All these are founded on mutation, and all of them mutually sesist and illustrate each other. But as painting, sculpture, music, and architecture cannot be perfectly attained without long practice of manual operation, we shall distanguish them from poetry and eloquence, which depend entirely on the faculties of the mand, and on these lash, as on the employ our attention in the present inquiry, or, if it should run to a greater length than we propose, it shall be confined to poetry alone; a subject that comprehends in its full extent the province of taste, or what is called polite hierature, and differs essentially from eloquence, both in its end and origin Poetry sprang from ease, and was consecrated to pleasure; whereas eloquence arose from necessity, and aims at conviction. When we say poetry sprang from ease, perhaps we ought to except that species of it which owed its rise to inspiration and outhusiasm, and properly belonged to the culture of religion. In the first ages of mankind, and even in the original state of Nature, the unlettered mind must have been etruck with eubline conceptions, with admiration and awe, by those great phenomena which, though every day repeated, can never be viewed without internal emotion. Those would break forth in exclamations expressive of the passion produced. whether surprise or gratitude, terror or exultation. The rising, the apparent course, the setting, and seeming renovation of the sun, the revolution of light and darkness, the splendour, change, and circuit of the moon, and the canopy of beaven bespangled with stars, must have produced expressions of wonder and adoration "O glorious luminary great eye of the world ! source of that light which guides my stems! of that heat which warms mo when chilled with cold! of that influence which cheers the face of Nature! whither dost thou retire every evening with the shade? Whence dost thou spring every morning with renovated lustic and never-fading glory? Art not thou the ruler, the creator, the god of all that I behold? I adore thee, as thy child, thy slave, thy supplicat! I crave thy protection, and the continuance of the goodness! Leave me not to peach with cold, or to wander solitary in utter darkness! Return, return, after thy wonted absence; drive before thee the glooms clouds that would obscure the face of Nature The bitds begin to winble, and every animal is filled with gladness at thy approach, even the trees, the horbs. and the flowers seem to report with freely berries. and send forth a grateful incense to thy power, whence their origin is derived!" A number of individuals, inspired with the same ideas, would join in these orisons, which would be accompanied with corresponding gesticulations of the body. They would be in proved by practice, and grow regular from repetition. The sounds and gestures would naturally fall into measured cadence. Thus the song and dance would be produced, and, a system of worship being formed, the muse would be consecrated to the purposes of religion

Hence those forms of thanksgrungs and hauses of supplication with which the religious rites of all mations, even the most burbarrous, are at this day celebrated in every quarter of the known would. Indeed, this is a circumstance in which all nations surprisingly agree how much seeves they may differ in every other article of laws, customs, manunus, and religion. The ancient Egyptains celebrated the festivals of their god Apis with hymns and dances. The superstation of the Greeks, partly derived from the Egyptains, abounded with poetical commonles, such as churness and hymns, sung and danced at their apotheoses, sacrifices, games, and divinations. The

45 VIII 1

Romans had their Carmen Seculare and Sahan priests, who on certain festivals sung and danced through the streets of Rome The Israelites were famous for this kind of exultation. "And Miriam, the prophetess, the sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand, and all the women went out after her, with timbrels and with dances, and Miriam answered them. Sing ye to the Lord," &c - "And David danced before the Lord with all his might" The psalms composed by this monarch, the songs of Deborah and Isauah, are further confirmations of what we have advanced

From the Phoenicians the Greeks borrowed the cursed Orthyan song, when they sacrificed their children to Diana The poetry of the baids constituted great part of the religious ceremonies among the Gauls and Britons; and the carousals of the Goths were religious institutions, celebrated with songs of triumph The Mahometan Dervise dances to the sound of the flute, and whirls himself round until he grows giddy, and falls into a trance The Marabous compose hymns in plaise of Alla The Chinese celebrate their grand festivals with processions of idols, songs, and instrumental music The Tartars, Samoiedes, Laplanders, Negroes, even the Caffres called Hottentots, solemnise their worship (such as it is) with songs and dancing, so that we may venture to say poetry is the universal vehicle m which all nations have expressed their most sublime conceptions

Poetry was, in all appearance, previous to any concerted plan of worship, and to every established system of legislation When certain individuals, by dint of superior prowess or understanding, had acquired the veneration of their fellow sayages, and erected themselves into divinities on the ignorance and superstition of mankind, then mythology took place, and such a swarm of denties arose, as produced a religion replete with the most shocking about dities Those whom their superior talents had defied were found to be still actuated by the most brutul passions of human nature, and, in all probability, their votaries were glad to find such examples to counte-Thus the most nance their own vicious inclinations uprestrained senso that and beentiousness were sanctified by the amours of Jupiter, Pan, Mars, Venus, and Apollo Theft was patronised by Mercury, drunkenness by Brechus, and cruelty by Diana The same heroes and legislators, those who delivered their country, founded cities, established societies, invented useful aits, or contributed in any eminent degree to the security and happiness of their fellow-creatures, were inspired by the same lusts and appetites which domineered among the inferior classes of mankind, therefore every vice incident to human nature was celebrated in the worship of one or other of these divinities, and every infirmity consecrated by public feast and solemn sacrifice. In these institutions the poet bore a principal share It was his genius that contrived the plan, that executed the form of worship, and recorded in verse the origin and adventures of their gods and demi-gods Hence the impulities and horrors of certain writers, the groves of Paphos and Basl-Peor, the orgies of Bacchus, the human sacrifices to Moloch and Diana Hence the theogony of Hesiod, the theology of Homer, and those innumerable maxims scattered through the ancient poets, inviting mankind to gratify their sensual appetites, in inutrition of the gods, who were certainly the best judges of happiness

VIII]

47

It is well known that Plato expelled Homer from his Commonwealth on account of the infamous characters by which he has distinguished his deities, as well as for some depraved sentiments which he found diffused through the comes of the Ihad and Odyssey Cicero enters into the spirit of Plato, and exclaims, in his first book De Natura Demum .- "Nec multo absurdiora sunt ea quæ, poetarum vocibn« fusa, ipsa suavitate nocuerunt qui et ira inflammatos et libidine furentes induverant Deos, feceruntque ut eorum bella, pugnas, prælia, vulnera videremus, odia praeterea, dissidia, discordias, ortus, interitus, querelas, lamentationes, effusas in omni intemperantià libidines, adulteria, vincula, cum humano genere concubitus, mortalesque ex immortali procreates "-" Nor are those things much more absurd which, flowing from the poet's tongue, have done mischief even by the sweetness of his expression The poets have introduced gods inflamed with anger and enlaged with last, and even produced before our eyes their wars, their wrangling, their duols, and their wounds They have exposed, besides, their antipathies, animosities, and dissensions, their origin and death, their complaints and lamentations, their appetites indulged to all manner of excess, their adulteries, their fetters, their amorons commerce with the human species, and from immortal parents derived a mortal offspring "

As the festivals of the gods necessarily produced good cheer, which often carried to root and debauchery, much of consequence prevailed, and this was always attended with buffoonery Tunis and jokes, and raillery and repartee, would necessarily ensue : and individuals would contend for the victory in wit and genius. These contests would in time be reduced to some regulations for the entertainment of the people thus assembled, and some pure would be decreed to him who was judged to excel his rivals. The candidates for fame and profit being thus stimulated, would task their talents, and naturally recommend these alternate recriminations to the andience by clothing them with a kind of poetical measure, which should bear a near recem blance to move Thus, as the solemn service of the day was composed in the most sublime species of poetry, such as the ode or hymn, the subsequent altercation was carried on in lambics, and gave rise to satire We are told by the Stagirite, that the highest species of poetry was omployed in celebrating great actions, but the humbler sort used in this kind of contention, and that in the ages of antiquity there were some bard, that professed herores, and some that pretended to nambles only. "Or ner howner, of de tapper -orn-al"

To these rude beginnings we not only owe the buth of satire, but likewise the origin of dramatic poetry Tragedy herself, which afterwards attained to such dignity as to rival the epic muse, was at first no other than a trial of crarabo, or manbes, between two persants, and a goat was the prize, as Horace calls it, wile cortamen ob hircum, "a mean contest for a he-goat." Hence the name τραγωδία, signifying the goot-song, from tpayos horous, and ωδή, carmen

"Curmine qui trigico vilem certavit ob hircum, Mor etiam agrestes satyros nudurit, et asper Incolumi gravitate pocura tentavit co, quod Illecebris erat et grată norrindre morandus Spectator, functusque sacras, et potus et exlex " "The tragic bord, a goat his humble prize, Bade saturs naked and uncouth ause: His minse severe, secure and undismay'd, The rustic toke in solemn strain convey'd:

f mrv

For novelty alone he knew could chaim A lawless clowd, with wine and feasting warm "

Satire, then, was originally a clownish dialogue in loose iambics, so called because the actors were disguised like satyrs, who not only recited the praises of Bacchus, or some other deity, but interspensed their hymns with saicastic jokes and altercation. Of this kind is the Cuclons of Euripides. in which Ulysses is the principal actor The Romans also had their Atellana, or interludes, of the same nature, so called from the city of Atella, where they were first acted; but these were highly polished in comparison of the original entertainment, which was altogether rude and innocent. Indeed the Cyclops itself, though composed by the accomplished Euripides, abounds with such impurity as ought not to appear on the stage of any civilised nation

It is very remarkable that the Atellana, which were in effect tragi-comedies, grow into such esteem among the Romans, that the performers in these pieces enjoyed several privileges which were refused to the ordinary actors They were not obliged to unmask, like the other player, when their action was disagreeable to the audience. They were admitted into the army, and enjoyed the privileges of free citizens, without incurring that disgrace which was affixed to the characters of other actors. The post Laberius, who was of equestian oider, being pressed by Julius Casar to act a part in his own performance, complied with great reluctance, and complained of the dishonour he had incurred in his

prologue, preserved by Macrobius, which is one of the most elegant morsels of antiquity

Tragedy and comedy flowed from the same fountain, though their streums were soon divided. The same entertainment which, under the name of tragedy, was rudely exhibited by clowns, for the prize of a goat, near some inval altra of Bacciaus, assumed the appellation of comedy when it was transferred into cities, and represented with a little more decours in a cart or waggen that sholled from slacet to shoot, as the name sequelist implies, being derived from source, and $\phi\tilde{\text{trans}}_{\text{off}}$ and $\phi\tilde{\text{trans}}_{\text{off}}$, a poem. To the origin Horace alludes in these lines.

"Diatur et planshis verisse poemata Thespre, Que concrent agerentque peruncii ficcibile oid."

"The pie, inventor of dramatic art,
Convey'd his vary inflactors in a cast
High o'er the crowd the minuse tribe appear'd,
And played and suag, with less of wine heavier'd."

Thesps is called the inventor of the dramatic art because he maked the subject from clownish alteration to the character and exploits of some heromation to the improved the language and versification, and reheved the chorus by the gradue of two actors. This was the first advance towards that consummation of genius and art which constitutes what is now cilled a perfect ta gody. The next great improve was Æschylus, of whem the some critic says.

"Post hunc persons pullsque repertor honeste
No hylus, et madies matrivit pulpita tignis, ht norent magninaque loqui mitigas cotharno".

"Then Æschylus a decent vizard used, Built i law stage, the flowing robe diffused in language more sublime the actors rage, And in the graceful bushin tread the stage," VIII 7

The dialogue which Thespis introduced was called the Episode, because it was an addition to the former subject, namely, the praises of Bacchus, so that now tragedy consisted of two distinct parts. independent of each other; the old recitative, which was the chous, sung in honour of the gods, and the cpisode, which turned upon the adventures of some hero. This episode being found very agreeable to the people, Æschylus, who hved about half a century after Thespis, still improved the drama, united the chorus to the episode, so as to make them both parts or members of one fable, multiplied the actors, contrived the stage, and introduced the decorations of the theatre; so that Sophocles, who succeeded Æschylus, had but one step to surmount in order to bring the drama to perfection. Thus tragedy was gradually detached from its original institution, which was entirely religious The priests of Bacchus loudly complained of this innovation by means of the emsode, which was foreign to the intention of the chorus, and hence arose the proverb of Nahal ad Dionysum, "Nothing to the purpose" Plutarch himself mentions the episode as a perversion of tragedy from the honour of the gods to the passions But notwithstanding all opposition, the new tragedy succeeded to admiration, because it was found the most pleasing vehicle of conveying moral truths, of mehorating the heart, and extending the interests of humanity

Comedy, according to Anstotle, is the younger sister of Tragedy As the first originally turned upon the pruises of the gods, the latter dwell on the follies and vices of mankind Such, we mean, was the scope of that species of poetry which acquired the name of comedy, in contradiction to the targic muse, for in the beginning they were the same. The foundation upon which coinedy was built we have already explained to be the practice of satureal repartee or altereation, in which individuals exposed the folles and finalities of each other on public occasions of working and festivity.

The first regular plan of comedy is said to have been the Margites of Homer, exposing the idleness and folly of a worthless character, but of this performance we have no remains. That division which is termed the Ancient Comedy belongs to the labours of Eupolis, Cratinus, and Austophanes, who were contemporaries, and flourished at Athens about tour hundred and thirty years before the Christian on Such was the heepse of the muse at this neriod, that, far from lashing vice in general characters, she boldly exhibited the exact postsait of every individual who had rendered himself remarkable or notorious by his crimes, folly, or debruchery She assumed every circumstance of his external appearance, his very attire, air, manner, and even his name, according to the observation of Horace.

Poetre

[&]quot;The came poets, in its earliest age,
Who form'd the minners of the Greens stage—
Was there a villium who might justly claim
A better night of being datan'd to fame,
Rake, ent threat, thus, whatever was his crune,
They boldly stignatised the wretch in rhyme."

53

vnr1

Eupolis is said to have satinsed Alcibiades in this manner, and to have fallen a sacrifice to the resentment of that powerful Athenian but others say he was drowned in the Hellespont, during a war against the Lacedemonians, and that in consequence of this accident the Athenians passed a decree that no poet should even hear aims.

The comedies of Cratinus are recommended by

Quintilian for their eloquence, and Plutarch tells us, that even Pericles himself could not escape the censure of this poet Austophanes, of whom there are eleven comedies still extant, enjoyed such a pre-eminence of reputation, that the Athenians, by a public decree, honoured him with a crown made of a consecrated olive tree, which grew in the citadel, for his care and success in detecting and exposing the vices of those who governed the commonwealth Yet this poet, whether impelled by mere wantonness of genius, or actuated by malice and envy, could not refigur from employing the shafts of his ridicule against Sociates, the most venerable character of Pagan antiquity In the comedy of 'The Clouds' this virtuous philosopher was exhibited on the stage. under his own name, in a cloak exactly resembling that which Socrates were, in a mask modelled from his features, disputing publicly on the nature of night and wrong This was undoubtedly an instance of the most flagrant licentiousness; and what renders it the more extraordinary, the audience received it with great applause, even while Sociates himself sat publicly in the theatre. The truth is, the Athenians were so fond of ildicale, that they relished it even when employed against the gods themselves, some of whose characters were vory roughly handled by Aristophenes and his rivals in reputation

We might here driw a parallel between the inhalatants of Athens and the natives of England in point of constitution, genms, and disposition Athens was a free state like England, that moved itself upon the influence of the democracy Lake England, its wealth and disength depended upon its marriage power, and it generally acted as ampite in the disputes that arose among its neighbours. The people of Athens, hke those of England, were remarkably ingenious, and made great progress in the arts and science. They excelled in poetry, history, philosophy, mechanics, and manufactures, they were scule descerning, disputations, fielde, wavering, rash, and combustible, and, above all other nations in Europe, addicted to lidecile, a character which the English inherit in a very remarkable degree

If we may judge from the writings of Aristophanes, his chief aim was to gratify the cyleen and excite the mith of his audience, of an audience, too, that would seem to have been uninformed by taste, and altogether ignorant of decorum, for his preces are replete with the mest extravigant absuidities, virtuent slander, impely, impurities, and low buffeoury. The come mive, not contented with boing allowed to make free with the gods and philosophers, applied her scounge so severely to the mygistrates of the commonwealth, that it was thought proper to restrain her within bounds by a law, enacting; that no person should be stigmatized under his real nume, and thus the chorus was silenced. In order nume, and thus the chorus was silenced. In order to elude the penalty of this law, and gratify the taste of the people, the poets began to substitute fictatious names, under which they exhibited particular characters in such lively colours, that the iesemblance could not possibly be mistaken or overlooked. This practice gave rise to what is called the Middle Comedy, which was but of short duration; for the legislature, perceiving that the first law had not removed the grievance against which it was provided, issued a second ordinance, forbidding, under severe penalties, any real or family occurtences to be represented. This restriction was the namedrate cause of improving comedy into a general muloi, held forth to reflect the various fellies and forbles incident to human nature, a species of writing called the New Comedy, introduced by Diphilus and Menander, of whose works nothing but a few fragments remain

TX.

POLTRY DISTINGUISHED FROM OTHER WRITING MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS, No. 20

HAVING communicated our sentiments touching the origin of poetry, by tracing tragedy and comedy to their common source, we shall now endeavour to point out the criteria by which poetry is distinguished from every other species of writing In common with other aits, such as statuary and printing, it comprehends imitation, invention, composition, and enthusiasm Imitation is indeed the basis of all the liberal aits, invention and enthusiasm constitute genius, in whatever manner it may be displayed Eloquence of all soits admits of entitiusiasm. Tully says an oration should be "rehemens it procella, excitatus ut toriens, meensus ut fulmen tonat, fulgurat, et rapida eloquentae fluctibus cuncta promit et profundat"—"Violent is a tempest, impetious as a torrent, and glowing intense like the ied bolt of heaven, he thunders, lightens, over throws, and bears down all before him, by the irresistible tide of eloquence." This is the mean atomic ratine or manne sometimes of forace. This is the talout.

14 Mount qui pectus maniter augit, Irritat, mulcet, falsis terroribus implet, Ut magus "

"With passions not my own who fires my heart Who with unreal terrors fills my briast, As rith a magic influence possess'd."

We are told that Michael Angelo Buonaroti used to work at his statues in a fit of enthusiasin, during which he made the fragments of the stone fly about him with surprising violence. The celebrated Enlly being one day blained for setting nothing to music but the languid verses of Quinault, was animated with the reproach, and running in a fit of enthusiasing to his harpsicherd, sing in recrutave and accompanied four pathetic lines from the Iphigenia of Raeine, with such expression as filled the hearers with astomishment and horror.

Though versification be one of the enterm that distinguish poetry from proce, yet it is not the sole mark of distinction. Were the instonce of Polybius and Livy simply turned into verse, they would not become poems, because they would be destitute of those figures, embellishments, and flights of imagnitude.

IX.

57

nation, which display the poet's art and invention. On the other hand, we have many productions that justly lay claim to the title of poetry, without having the advantage of versification; witness the Psalms of David, the Song of Solomon, with many beautiful hymns, descriptions, and thapsodies, to be found in different parts of the Old Testament, some of them the immediate production of divine inspiration; witness the Celtic fragments which have lately appeared in the English language, and are certainly replete with poetical merit. But though good versification alone will not constitute poetry, bad versification alone will certainly degrade and render disgustful the sublimest sentiments and finest flowers of imagination This humiliating power of bad verse appears in many translations of the ancient poets, in Ogilby's Homer, Trapp's Virgil, and frequently in Cheech's Horace This last indeed is not wholly devoid of spirit, but it seldom lises above mediccrity, and, as Horace says,

Non homines, non Di, non concessere columna."

"But God and man, and letter'd post denies,
That Poets ever are of middling size."

That Poets ever are of middling size."

How is that beautiful odo beginning with Justim of tenecem propositi virum chilled and tuned by the following translation:

"He who by principle is sway'd,
In truth and justice still the same,
Is nother of the crowd afraid,
Thought out I broils the state miliane;
Nor to a huighty tyrant's frown will stoop,
Nor to a ruging storm, when all the winds we up.

constitute genius, in whatever manner it may be displayed Eloquence of all sorts admits of en-Tully says an erator should be "vehemens ut procella, excitatus nt toriens, incensus ut fulmen tonat, fulgurat, et rapidis eloquentire fluctibus cuncta proruit et proturbat "-" Violent as a tempest, impetuous as a torrent, and glowing intense like the red holt of heaven, he thunders, lightens, overthrows, and bears down all before him, by the mesistible tide of eloquence" This is the mens divinior atque os magan sonaturum of Horace This is the talent.

Moum qui pectus inmitar angit, Irritat, muleet, falsis terroribus implot, Ut magus "

"With passions not my own who fites my heart Who with unreal terrors fills my broast, As with a magne influence possess'd."

We are told that Michael Angelo Buonaroti used to work at his statues in a fit of enthusiasm, during which he made the fragments of the atons fly about him with surprising violence The celebrated Lully being one day blamed for setting nothing to music but the languid verses of Quinault, was animated with the repreach, and running in a fit of enthusiasm to his harpsichord, sung in recitative and accompanied four pathetic lines from the Iphigenia of Racine, with such expression as filled the hearers with astmushment and howen

Though versification be one of the criteria that distinguish poetry from plose, yet it is not the sole mark of distinction Were the histories of Polybius and Lavy samply turned into verse, they would not become poems, because they would be destitute of those figures, embellishments, and flights of imagi1x.7

nation, which display the poet's art and invention. On the other hand, we have many productions that justly lay claim to the tatle of poetry, without having the advantage of versification, witness the Psalms of David, the Song of Solomon, with many beautiful hymns, descriptions, and thapsodies, to be found in different parts of the Old Testament, some of them the immediate production of divine inspilation; witness the Celtie fragments which have lately appeared in the English language, and are certainly replete with poetical merit. But though good versification plone will not constitute poetry, bad versification alone will certainly degrade and sender disgustful the sublimest sentiments and finest flowers of imagination This humiliating power of bad verse appears in many translations of the ancient poets, in Ogilby's Homer, Trapp's Virgil, and frequently in Creech's Horace. This last indeed is not wholly devoid of spant, but it seldom uses above mediocity, and, as Horace says,

Non homines, non Di, non concessere columnæ."

"But God and man, and letter'd post denies, That Poets ever are of middling size"

How is that beautiful ode beginning with Justum et tonacem propositi errum chilled and tained by the following translation:

"He who by principle is way'd,
In truth and justice still the same,
Is notifier of the crowd afraid,
Though und broads the state inflame,
Nor to a haught; tymut's frown will stoop,
Nor to a ryging storm, when all the winds are up.

Should nature with convulsions shake, Strack with the fory bolts of Jove, The final doom and dreadful cruk Cunot his constant courage move."

That long Alexandrine—"Nor to a raging storm, when ill the winds are up," is drawing, feeble, within with a pleomasm or tantology, as well as deficient in the thyme, and as for the "dicadful crack," in the next stapza, instead of exciting terror, it conveys a low and ludenous idea. How much more olegant and energetic is this paraphrase of the same ode, inserted in one of the volumes of Hume's History of England.

44 The man whose mand, on virtue bent, Pursies some greatly good intent With undirected aim, Serune beholds the angry crowd, Not can their changers herce and loud His stubborn home tame.

"Not the groud tyrant's fiert est this it, Not storms that from their dark retrent The lavless surges wake, Nor Joro's dread bolt, that shakes the pole, The hirmer purpose of his soul With all its powers can shake.

"Should niture's frame in runs full, And chaos o'er the anking ball Resurts princed sway, His courage chance and fate defics, Nor feels the wards of earth and ekios Obstruct its destined way "

If poetry exists independent of verification, it will naturally be asked, how then is it to be distinguished? Undonbtedly by its own peculiar expression it has a language of its own, which speaks so feelingly to the heart, and so pleasingly to the magmation, that its meaning cannot possibly be misunderstood by any person of delicate sensations. It is a species of penning with words, in which the figures are happily conceived, migeniously arranged, affectingly expressed, and recommended with all the warmth and harmony of colouring it consists of imagery, description, metaphors, similes, and sentiments, adapted with propriety to the subject, so contrived and executed as to soothe the ear, surprise and delight the fancy, mend and melt the heart, elevate the mind, and please the understanding According to Flacous:

- "Aut prodesse volunt, aut delectare poeta, Aut simul et jucunda et idonea dicere vite"
- "Poets would profit or delight mankind, And with th'amusing show th' instructive join'd"
- "Omne tulit punctum, qui miscuit utile dulei, Loctorem delectando panterque monendo"
- "Profit and pleasure mingled thus with art, To soothe the fancy and improve the heart"

Tropes and figures are likewise liberally used in chetoric and some of the most celebrated orators have owned themselves much indebted to the posts. Theophrastus expressly recommends the poets for this purpose. From their source the spirit and energy of the pathetic, the sublime, and the beautiful are derived. But these figures must be more sparingly used in thetonic than in poetry, and even their mingled with argumentation, and a detail of facts, altogether different from postical narration. The poet instead of simply relating the incident, strikes off a glowing pacture of the scene, and exhibits it in the most lively colours to the eye of the imagination "It is reported that Homer was blind," says Tully in his Tusoulan Questions, "yet his poetry is no other than painting What country, what climate, what ideas, battles, commotions, and contests of men, as well as of wild beasts, has he not painted in such a manner, as to bring before our eyes those very scenes which he himself could not behold?" We cannot, therefore, subscribe to the opinion of some ingenious critics, who have blamed Mr Pope for deviating in some instances from the simplicity of Homer, in his translation of the Iliad and Odyssey For example, the Grecum bard says simply "the sun rose," and the translator gives us a beautiful picture of the sun rising Homor mentions a person who played upon the lyre, the translator sets him before us waibling to the silver strings If this be a deviation, it is at the same time an improvement Homer lumselt, as Cicero observes above, is full of this kind of painting, and particularly fond of description, even in situations where the action seems to require haste Neptune, observing from Samothrace the discomfiture of the Greenans before Troy, flies to their assistance, and might have been wafted thither in half a line, but the bard describes him. first, descending the mountain on which he sat. secondly, striding towards his palace at Ægre, and yoking his horses, thirdly, he describes him putting on his atmour, and, lastly, ascending his ear, and driving along the surface of the sea Far from being disgusted by these delays, we are delighted with the particulars of the description Nothing can be more sublime than the circumstance of the mountain's trembling beneath the footsteps of an immortal,

΄. Τρέμε δ' σὐρέα μακρά καὶ ὕλη Ποσσὶν ὑπ' ἀβανάτοισι Ποσειδάωνος ἰάντος "

IX.]

But his pissage to the Grecian fleet is altogether transporting.

" Βη δ' έλαθν έπὶ κύματ'," κ.τ λ

"He mounts the car, the golden scourge applics,
He sits superior, and the charact flies;
His whirling wheels the glassy surface sweep,
Th' enormous monsters, iolling o'er the deep,
Gambol around him on the watery way,
And heavy whiles in waku and measures plus;
The sea subsiding spreads a level plain,
Exults and crowns the monrich of the min;
The parting waves before his coursers fly;
The wond ring waters fleave in sark dry

With great veneration for the memory of Mi. Popo, we cannot help objecting to some lines of this translation. We have no idea of the sea's exulting and crowning Neptune, after it had subsided into a level plain. There is no such image in the original Homer says the whales exulted, and know, or owned their king, and that the sea purted with joy γηθοσύτη δὲ θαλόσσα δύστατο. Neither is there a word of the wondering waters we therefore think the lines might be thus altered to advantage.

"They knew and own'd the monarch of the main The sea subsiding spreads a level plain, The curjing wives before his coursess fly, The putting sunface leaves his brizon axle dry"

Desides the metaphors, similes, and allusions of poetry, there is an infinite viriety of tropes, or turns of expression, occasionally disseminated through works of genius, which serve to animate the whole and distinguish the glowing effusions of real inspiration from the cold chorts of meta-science. These tropes consist of a cert in happy choice and arrangement of words, by which ideas are artifully disclosed in a great variety of attitudes, of epithety, and compound epithots, of sounds collected in order to echo the same conveyed, of apostrophes, and above all, the enchanting use of the prescriptors, which is a kind of magic, by which the poet gives life and motion to every immunity part of inture. Homes, describing the weath of Agametanoa, in the first book of the Hard, stalkes off a glowing image in two words.

" . . Some & of -upl hau-erouper elector"

"- und from his eyeballs flash'd the living fire "

This indeed is a figure which has been copied by Virgil, and almost all the poets of every age—oculis muct accides gase—ignescent are aures dolor oscibuacide. Alliton, describing Satan in hell, says.

"With head uplift above the wave, and eye That spariling blazit-

—He spike and to confirm his words out flew Millions of flating awords, drawn from the thighs Of nighty cherubin. The sudden blaze Far round illumined hell.—"

There are central words in every language pai tically adapted to the poetical expression, some from the frage or idea they convey to the imagenation, and some from the effect they have upon the ear. The first are trally figurative, the others may be called empletized. Ealth observes that Virgil has, upon many occasions, postssed (if we may be allowed the expression) a whole sentence by means of the same word, which is pendere

"Ito mee, felix quondam pecus, ite capelles; Non ego vos posthae, viridi projectus in antro, Dumosa pendero procul de rupe videbo"

"At case reclined beneath the verdant shade No more shall I behold my happy flock Aloft hang browsing on the fufted rock,"

Here the word penders wonderfully improves the landscape, and ienders the whole presage beautifully picturesque. The same figurative verb we meet with in many different parts of the Abned.

"Hi summo fluctu pendent, his unda dehiscons Torram inter fluctus aperit "

"These on the mountain billow hing, to those
The wanning wards the yellow sand disclose"

In this instance the words pendent and deleacens, king and yawning, are equally poetical. Addison seems to have had this passage in his eye when he wrote his Hymn, which is inserted in the Spectator:

> "-For though in dreadful worlds we hung, High on the broken wave"

And in another piece of a like nature in the same collection

> "Thy providence my life sustain'd, And all my wants rediess'd, When in the silent womb I lay, And hung upon the breast"

Shakespeare, in his admired description of Dover cliff, uses the same expression

"—half way down Hangs one that guthers samphire—dreadful trade"

Nothing can be more beautiful than the following picture, in which Milton has introduced the same expressive tent

"—he, on his side Leaning, half raised, with looks of cordial love Hung over her enamour'd"

We shall give one example more from Viigil to show in what a volutly of scenes it may appear with propincty and effect. In describing the progrees of Dido's passion for Zeneas the poet says

> "Hircog abaum demons andre labores Exposort, pendelque sterum narrantes ab one "

"The note of Troy once more she begg'd to hear, Once more the mournful tale employ'd his tengue, While in fend rapture on his lips she hung"

The render will perceive, in all these instances, that no other word could be substituted with like energy, indeed, no other word could be used, without degrading the sense and defacing the image

There are many other verbs of poetroal import, fetched from nature and from set, which the Poot, wees to advantage, both in a liberal and metaphonical sense, and these have been always translated for the same purpose from one language to another, such as guasse, concute, ecce, succite, lenne, excue, mane, fluo, ardeo, maco, are, to shake, to wake, to recurse, to soothe, to rage, to flow, to shine or blaze, to plough—Quessanda tectric livera—America can connecsus accreto—Are ever uses, Martemque accendere cantu—America acute Martenet es e succitat wa—Impure lente elementers—Lenthant evers—As soon magna sear-doe—Sudor ad antes man that solos—Surpensaque dru lacryma fluxers per ora—Juscinia ardolut amore Micat aversus ensis—Natham sans a aquor a pandum. It will be unnecessary to meert examples of the same nature from the English poets.

65

The words we term emphatical are such as by their sound express the sense they are intended to convey, and with these the Greek abounds, above all other languages, not only from its natural copiousness, flexibility, and significance, but also from the variety of its dialects, which enables a writer to vary his terminations occasionally as the nature of the subject requires, without offending the most delicate ear, or incurring the imputation of adopting vulgar provincial expressions. Every smatterer in Greek can repeat

" βη δ' ἀκέων παρά θεια τολυφλοισβοίο θαλάσσης."

in which the two late words wonderfully echo to the sense, conveying the idea of the sea dashing on the shore. How much more significant in sound than that beautiful image of Shakespeare—

'The sea that on the unnumber d pebbles beats !"

And yet, if we consider the strictness of propriety, this last expression would seem to have been selected on purpose to concur with the other crumstunces which are brought together to ascertain the vast height of Dover cliff, for the poet adds, "cannot be heard so high" The place where Glo'ster stood was so high hove the surface of the set, that the $\delta\lambda \text{ord} \text{fos}_0$, or $\delta \text{dading}$, could not be heard, and therefore an enthusiastic admirer of Shakespeare might, with some plurability, affirm the poet had chosen an expression in which that sound is not at all conveyed

In the very same page of Homer's Iliad we meet with two other staking instances of the same sort of beauty Apollo, incensed at the insults his miest had sustained, descends from the top of Olympus with his bow and quiver latthing on his shoulder as he moved along

Erlangar & Ep stores en bucy "

Here the sound of the word Exlayear admirably ev presses the clanking of armour , as the third line after this surprisingly imitates the twanging of a bow

" בנודון פֿוֹ הושוים שליים שליים מונים " In shrill toned murmum sang the twanging bon "

Many be witten of the same kind are scattered through Homer, Pindar, and Theocratus, such as the Boulevoa uiliona. m. m rans apicula, the abb differena, dulcem avauntum, and the pedioberas, for the sighing of the mne

The Latin language teems with sounds adapted to every situation, and the English is not destitute of this significant energy We have the cooing turtle, the sighing reed, the warbling rivulet, the gliding stream, the whispering breeze, the glance, the gleam, the flash, the bickering flame, the dashing wave, the gushing spring, the houling blast, the rattling storm. the pattering shower, the crimp earth, the mouldering tower, the twanging bowstring, the clanging arms, the clanking chains, the twinkling stars, the tinkling chords, the trickling drops, the twittering swallow, the cawing rook, the screeching owl; and a thousand other words and epithets, wonderfully suited to the sense they imply

Among the select passages of poetry which we shall unsert by way of illustration, the reader will Y] THE TENANTS OF THE LEASOWES find instances of all the different tropes and figures which the best authors have adopted in the variety of their poetical works, as well as of the apostrophe, abrupt transition, repetition, and prosopopesia.

In the meantime it will be necessary still farther to analyse those principles which constitute the essence of poetical ment; to display those delightful parteries that teem with the fairest flowers of imagination, and distinguish between the gaudy offspring of a cold inspired fancy and the glowing progeny, diffusing sweets, produced and invigorated by the sun of genus

X

THE TENANTS OF THE LEASONES HISTORY OF A POET'S GARDEN MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS, No. 34

Or all men who form gay allusions of distant happiness, perhaps a poet is the most sanguine Such is the ardour of his hopes, that they often are equal to actual enjoyment, and he feels more in expectance than actual fruition. I have often regulated a character of this kind with some degree of envy. A man possessed of such warm imagination commands all nature, and arrogates possessions of which the owner has a blunter relish. While life continues, the illump prospect hes before him, he travels in the pursuit with confidence, and resigns it only with his last breath.

It is this happy confidence which gives life its true relish, and keeps up our spirits aimdst every distress and disappointment. How much less would be done, if a min knew how little he can do! how withhed a creature would be be, if he and the end as well as the beginning of his project I He would have nothing left but to it down in forpul dequir, and exchange employment for actual calumity,

I was led into this train of thinking upon lately exiting the heartiful guidens of the late Mr. Shenstone, who was blue elf a pact, and possessed of that warm imagination, which make him ever foremost in the pursuit of flying happiness. Could he but have foreseen the end of all his schemes, for whom he was improving, and what changes has designs were to undergo, he would have sourcely amused his morcent life with what, for soveril years, employed him in a most harmless member, and shirtlyed his scanty fortune. As the progress of this improvement is a true picture of cubluming viersatude, I could not help calling up my min gination which, while I walked pensively alone. suggested the following severie

As I was turning my back upon a heautiful piece of water enlivened with ciscades and rock work. and entering a dark walk by which ran a pratting brook, the genius of the place apprincil before me, but more resembling the God of Time, than him more neculiarly appointed to the cue of gardens Instead of shears he bore a scythe, and he amen d rather with the implements of husbandry, than those of a modern gardener. Having remembered this place in its pristing beauty, I could not help condoling with him on its present runous situation I spoke to him of the many alterations which had been made, and all for the worse, of the * 1772 possession of his mind, the girdens were opened to the visits of every stringer, and the country flocked cound to the walk, to enhance, to admire, and to do mischief He soon found, that the admirers of his taste left by no means such strong marks of their applause, as the envious did of their malignity. All the windows of his temples, and the walls of his toterats, were impressed with the characters of profanciess, ignorance, and obscemby, his hedges were broken, his statues and urns defaced, and his lawns worn bare. It was now therefore necessary to shut up the gordens once more, and to deprive the public of that happiness which had before ceased to be his own.

"In this situation the post continued for a time in the character of 1 ye house hover found of the hearity he keeps, but unable to supply the activations of every demand. The garden by this time was completely grown and finished, the marks of art weste covered up by the luxumance of nature, the winding walks were grown dark, the brook assumed a natural sylvage, and the rocks were covered with moss. Nothing now remained but to enjoy the beauties of the place, when the poor poet died, and his gaiden was obleged to be sold for the banelis of those who had contributed to its sumbellishment.

"The beauties of the place had now for some time been celebrated as well in prose as in verse and all men of tiste wished for so curved a spot, where every turn was marked with the poefs pencal, and every walk awakened gemus and meditation. The first purchases was one Mi Troopenny, a button maker, who was possessed of these thousand pounds, and was willing also to be possessed of taste and gemus. x] THE TENANTS OF THE LEASOWES.

71

"As the poet's ideas were for the natural wildness of the landscape, the button-maker's were for the more regular productions of art. He conceived, perhaps, that as it is a beauty in a button to be of a legular pattern, so the same regularity ought to obtain in a landscape. Be this as it will, he employed the shears to some purpose, he clipped up the hedges, cut down the gloomy walks, made vistas upon the stables and hog-sizes, and showed his friends that a man of taste should always be doing

"The next candidate for taste and genus was a captain of a ship, who bought the garden because the former possessor could find nothing more to mend, but unfortunately he had a taste too this great passion lay in huilding, in making Chinese temples, and cage-work summer-bouses. As the place before had an appearance of retirement, and inspired meditation, he gave it a more peopled an every turn presented a cottage, or ice-house, or a temple, the improvement was converted into a little city, and it only wanted inhabitants to give it the air of a village in the East Indies.

"In this manner, in less than ten years, the improvement has gone through the hands of as many proprietors, who were all willing to have taste, and to show their taste too. As the place had received its best finishing from the hand of the first possessor, so every innovator only lent a hand to do mischief. Those parts which were obscure, have been enlightened, those walks which led naturally, have been twisted into scriential windings. The colour of the flowers of the field is not more various than the variety of tastes that have been employed here, and all in direct contradiction to the original

aim of the first improve. Could the original possessor but revive, with what sorrowful heart would he look upon his favourite spot again! He would scarcely recollect a Dryad or a Wood-nymph of his former acquaintance, and might perhaps find himself as much a stranger in las own plantation as in the deserts of Siboria

XI

THE SAGACITY OF THE SPIDER FROM 'THE BEL. No 4

Sir,-Animals, in general, are sagacious in proportion as they cultivate society. The elephant and the beaver show the greatest signs of this when united, but when man intrudes into their communities, they lose all their spirit of industry, and testify but a very small share of that sugarity for which, when in a social state, they are so remarkable

Among myets, the labours of the bee and the ant have employed the attention and admiration of the naturalist, but their whole sagacity is lost upon separation, and a single bee or ant seems destitute of every degree of industry, is the most stupid insect imaginable, languishes for a time in solitude, and soon dies

Of all the solitary msects I have ever remarked, the spider is the most sagarious, and its actions, to me who have attentively considered them, seem almost to exceed belief. This insect is formed by nature for a state of war, not only upon other insects, but upon each other. For this state nature seems perfectly well to have formed it. Its head and breast are covered with a strong natural coat of mul, which is impenetrable to the attempts of every other insect, and its belly is enveloped in a soft plant skin, which eludes the sting even of a wasp. Its legs are termmated by strong claws, not unlike those of a lobster, and their vast length like spears, serves to keep every assailant at a distance.

73

Not worse furnished for observation than for an attack or a defence, it has several eyes, large, transparent, and covered with a horny substance, which however, does not impede its vision. Besides this, it is furnished with the fotceps above the mouth, which serves to kill or secure the prey aheady caught in its claws or its net.

Such are the implements of war with which the body is immediately furnished; but its net to entangle the enemy seems what it chiefly trusts to, and what it takes most pains to render as complete as possible Nature, by a currous provision, has furnished the body of this little creature with a glutmous hound which it spins into thread, coarser or finer, according to the object it has in view In order to fix its thread, when it begins to weave it emits a small drop of its liquid against the wall, which, hardening by degrees, serves to hold the thread very firmly, then receding from the first point, as it lecedes the thread lengthens, and, when the spider has come to the place where the other end of the thread should be fixed, gathering up with its claws the thread. which would otherwise be too slack, it is stretched parallel to each other, which, so to speak, serve as the warp to the intended web To form the woof, it spins in the same manner its thread, transversely fixing one can to the first thread that was spun, and which is always the strongest of the whole web, and the other to the wall. All these threads, being newly spun, are glutinous, and therefore stick to each other wherever they happen to touch, and m those parts of the web most exposed to be torn, our natural artist strengthens them, by doubling the threads sometimes sixfold

before

of this animal, what follows is the result of my own observation upon that species of the insect called a house epider I perceived, about four years ago, a large spider in one corner of my room, making its web, and, though the maid frequently levelled her fat il broom against the labours of the little animal, I had the good fortune then to prevent its destruction , and, I may wy, it more than paid me by the entertainment it afforded In three days the web was, with meredible dili-

Thus far naturalists have gone in the description

gence, completed; nor could I avoid thinking, that the most so med to exult in its new abode frequently traversed it round, examined the strength of every part of it, retailed into its hole, and came out very frequently. The first enemy, however, it had to encounter, was another and a much larger pater, which, having no vehof its own, and having probably celemeted all its stock in former labours of this kind, came to maide the property of its 78

XΠ

CHINESE LETTERS, OR, THE CITIZEN OF THE WORLD

THE EDITOR'S PREFACE

The schoolmen had formerly a very exact way of computing the abilities of their sunts or authors Escobar, for instance, was said to have learning as five, genues as four, and gravity as seven. Caramuel was greater than he His learning was as eight, his genues as six, and his gravity as thriteen. Were I to estimate the ment of our Chinese Philosopher by the same scale. I would not hesitate to state his genue still higher; but as to his learning and gravity, these, I think, might safely be marked as nine hundred and ninety-nine, within one dogree of absolute frigidity

Yet, upon his first appealance here, many were angry not to find hum as ignorant as a Trippine ambiasador or an entry from Munc. They were surprised to find a man born so far from London, that school of prudence and wisdom, endued even with a moderate capacity They expressed the same surprise at his knowledge that the Chinese do of ours. "How comes it," said they, "that the Europeans, so remote from China, think with so much justice and procision? They have never read our books, they exarcely know even our letters, and yet they talk and reason just as we do." The truth is, the Chinese and we are pustly much alike. Different degrees of refinoment, and not of distance, mark the distinctions among manked. Savages of the most opposite climates have all but one character.

XII]THE CITIZEN OF THE WORLD PREFACE 79

of improvidence and impacity, and tutored nations, however separate, make use of the very same methods to produce refined enjoyment

The distinctions of polite nations are few, but such as are peculiar to the Chinese appear in every page of the following correspondence The metaphois and allusions are all drawn from the East Then formality our author carefully preserves Many of their favourite tenets in morals are illustrated The Chinese are always concise; so is he Simple, so is ho. The Chinese are grave and sententious, so is he But in one particular the resemblance is peculiarly striking the Chinese are often dull, and so is he Nor has my assistance been wanting We are told in an old romance of a certain knight-errant and his house who contracted an intimate friendship. The horse most usually bore the knight, but, in cases of extraordinary dispatch, the knight returned the favour, and carried his horse Thus, in the intimacy between my author and me, he has usually given me a lift of his eastern sublimity, and I have sometimes given him a return of my colloquial ease

Tet it appears strange, in this season of panegyre, when scarcely an author passes unpraised either by his friends or himself, that such merit as our Philosopher's should be forgotten. While the epithets of ingenious, copious, elaborate, and refined are lavished among the mob, like medals at a coronation, the lucky prives fall on every sade, but not one on him I could on this occasion make myself melancholy, by considering the capiciousness of public taste, or the mutability of fortune, but during this fit of moiality, lest my reader should sleep, I'll take a uap myself, and when I awake tell hum my dream

I imagined the Thames was frozen over, and I stood by its side. Several booths were exected upon the roe, and I was told by one of the speciators, that Fashion Fan was going to begin. He added, that severy author who could earry he works there might probably find a very good receptare. I was resolved, however, to observe the humours of the place in safety from the shore; sanishle that no was at best precarous, and having been always a little cowardly in my deep.

Several of my acquaintance seemed much more haily thin I, and went over the ice with interplicity Some curred their works to the fair on sledges, some on carts and those which were more voluminous were conveyed in waggens. Then temerity astonished me. I knew their cargoes were heavy, and expected every moment they would have gone to the bottom. They all entered the fair, however, in safety, and each soon after returned, to my great surprise, highly catisfied with his entertainment and the bargains he had brought away.

The success of such numbers at last began to operate upon me and safety, some luck may, perhaps, for once attend the unfortunate. I am resolved to make a new adventure. The furniture, furperly, and fireworks of China have long been fashionably bought up I'll try the fair with a small carge of Chinese notatity. If the Chinese have contained to visit out taste, I'll tay how I'm they can help to improve your understanding. But, so others have driven into the market in waggons, I'll cautiously begin by venturing with a wheelbarrow. Thus resolved, I build up my goods, and fairly ventured, when, upon just entering the fair, I fancied the fee, that had supported an hundred waggons before, cracked under me, and wheelbarrow and all went to the bottom.

Upon awaking from my reverse with the fright, I cannot help wishing that the pains taken in giving this correspondence an English dress had been employed in contriving new political systems, or new plots for farces I might then have taken my station in the world, either as a poet or a philosopher, and made one in those little societies where men club to larse each other's reputation. But at present I helong to no particular class I resemble one of those animals that has been forced from its forest to gratify human currosity. My earliest wish was to escape unbeeded through life, but I have been set up for half-pence, to fret and scamper at the end of my cham Though none are mjured by my rage, I am naturally too savage to court any friends by fawning, too obstinate to be taught new tricks, and too improvident to mind what may happen I am appeared, though not contented Too indolent for intrigue, and too tunid to push for favour, I am-But what signifies what am I?

> " Έλπλε και σὰ σύχη μέγο γαίρετε σὸν λιμέν εύρου Ουδέν έμοι χ' υμίν παίζετε σούς μετ' ἐιὰ "

[&]quot;Hope and Chines, fare 3e well I have found my port I have no longer any need of you; make your sport of those who shall come "the me."

XIII.

THE CHINESE PHILOSOPHER VISITS WESTMINSTER A REELY

I am just returned from Westminster Abbey, the place of sepulture for the philosophers, heroes, and kings of England What a gloom do monumental inscriptions and all the venerable remains of deceased ment inspire! Imagine a temple marked with the hand of antiquity, solemn as religious awe, adorned with all the magmificence of barbarous profusion, dim windows, fietted pillars, long colonnados, and dark ceilings. Think, then, what were my sensations at being introduced to such a scene I stood in the midst of the temple, and threw my eyes round on the walls, filled with the statues, the inscriptions, and the monuments of the dead

Alas! I said to myself, how does pride attend the puny child of dust even to the grave! Even humble as I am, I possess more consequence in the present scene than the greatest hero of them all they have toried for an hour to gain a transient immortality, and are at length retired to the grave, where they have no attendant but the worm, none to flatter but the epitoph

As I was indulging such reflections, a gentlem in dressed in black, perceiving me to be a stranger, came up, entered into conversation, and politely offered to be my instructor and guide through the temple "It any monument," -ud he, "should excite your curiosity, I shall endeayour to satisfy your demands" I accepted, with thanks, the AM] THE VISIT TO WESTMINSTER ABERY 8:

gentleman's often, adding, that "I was come to observe the policy, the wisdom, and the justice of the English, in conferring newards upon deceased merit, If adulation like this," continued I, "be properly conducted, as it can m no ways injure those who are flattered, so it may be a glorious incentive to those who are now capable of enjoying it. It is the duty of every good government to turn this monumental pude to its own advantage, to become strong in the aggregate from the weakness of the individual If none but the truly great have a place in this awful repository, a temple like this will give the finest lessons of mon they, and be a strong incentive to true ambition I am told, that none have a place here but characters of the most distinguished merit" The Man in Black seemed imputiont at my observations, so I discontinued my remarks, and we walked on together to take a view of every particular

As the eye is naturally caught by the finest objects, I could not avoid being particularly emilous about one monument, which appeared more beautiful than the rest "That," said I to my guide, "I take to be the tomb of some very great man. By the peculiar excellence of the workmanship, and the magnificence of the design, this must be a trophy ruised to the memory of some king who has saved his country from rum, or law-giver who has reduced his fellow-entizens from anarchy into just subjection "—"It is not requisite," replied my companion, smiling, "to have such qualifications in order to have a very fine monument here: more humble abilities will suffice."—"What! I suppose, then, the grining two or thies battles, or the monument in order as it lay

81

taking half a score of towns, is thought a sufficient qualification?"- Gaining battles, or taking towns," replied the Man in Black, "may be of service, but a gentleman may have a very fine monument here without ever seeing a buttle or a siege "-"This, then, is the monument of some poet, I presume -of one whose wit has gained him immortality?" -" No. sn," replied my guide, "the gentleman who hes here never made verses, and as for wif, he despised it in others, because he had none himself " -"Pray tell me, then, in a word," said I, previshly, "what is the great man who lies here particularly remarkable for ?"-"Remarkable, sir!" said my companion, "why, sir, the gentleman that lies here is remarkable, very remarkable—for a tomb in Westminster Abbey" - But, head of my ancestors how has he got here? I famey he could never bribe the guardians of the temple to give him a place. Should he not be ashamed to be seen among company where even moderate ment would look like infamy ?"-"I suppose," replied the Man in Black, "the gentleman was rich, and his friends, as is usual in such a case, told him he was great He really believed them; the guardians of the temple, as they got by the selfdelusion, were ready to believe him too, so he prid his money for a fine monument, and the workman, as you see, has made him one of the most beautiful, Think not, however, that this gentleman is singular in his desire of being buried among the great; there are several others in the temple, who, hated and shunned by the great while alive, have come here fully resolved to keep them company now they are dead "

As we walked along to a particular part of the temple, "There," says the gentleman, pointing with his finger, "that is the Poet's Corner, there you see the monuments of Shake-peare, and Milton, and Prior, and Drayton."- Drayton " I replied, "I never heard of him before, but I have been told of one Pope -is he there?"-"It is time enough," replied my guide, "these hundred years, he is not long dead, people have not done hating him yet "-"Strange," cried I, "can any be found to hate a man whose life was wholly spent in entertaining and instructing his fellow-creatures?"-"Yes," says my guide, "they hate him for that very reason. There are a set of men called answerers of books, who take upon them to watch the republic of letters, and distribute reputation by the sheet; they somewhat resemble the eunuclis in a seraglio, who are incapable of giving pleasure themselves, and hinder those that would These answerers have no other employment but to cry out Dunce and Scribbler, to praise the dead and sevile the living, to grant a man of confessed abilities some small share of merit, to applaud twenty blockheads in order to gain the reputation of candour, and to revile the moral character of the man whose writings they cannot injure. Such wretches are kept in pay by some mercenaly bookseller, or more frequently the bookseller himself takes this dirty work off their hands, as all that is required is to be very abasive and very dull. Every poet of any genus is sure to find such enemies; he feels, though he seems to despise, their malice, they make him miserable here, and in the pursuit of empty tame, at last he gains solid anxiety"

"Has this been the case with every poet I see here?" cried I — "Yes, with every mother's son of them," replied he, "except he happened to be born a mandaim. If he has much money, he may buy reputation from your book answers; as well as a monument from the guardians of the temple"

"But we there not some men of distinguished tasts, as in China, who are willing to pationise men of mails, and soften the rancour of malevolent dulness?"

"I own there are many," replied the Man in Black, "but alsal ar, the book-answerers crowd about them, and call themselves the writers of books, and the patron is too indolent to drainguish thus posts are kept at a distance, while their enemies cat up all their rewards at the mandatin's table"

Leaving this part of the temple, we made up to an non-gate, through which my companion told me we were to pass, in order to see the monuments of the kings Accordingly, I marched up without further ceremony, and was going to enter, when a person who held the gate in his hand told me I must pay first I wis surprised at such a demand, and asked the man, whether the people of England kept a show?—whether the paltry sum he demanded was not a national repreach?—whether it was not more to the honour of the country to let their magnifirence or then antiquities be openly seen, than thus meanly to tax a currosity which tended to their own honour?"-"As for your questions," replied the gatekeeper, "to be sure they may be very right, because I don't understand them, but, as for that there threepence, I farm it from one-who rents it from another-who heres it from a thirdwho leases it from the guardians of the temple; and we all must live" I expected, upon paying here, to AIII] THE VISIT TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY. 87
see something extraordinary, since what I had seen for nothing filled me with so much surprise but in this I was disappointed, there was little more within than black coffins, justy armoun, tattered standards, and some few slovenly figures in wax. I standards, and some few slovenly figures in wax. I was sorry I had paid, but I comforted myself by considering it would be my last payment. A person attended us who without once blushing told an hundred lies, he talked of a lady who died by pricking her finger, of a king with a golden head, and twenty such pieces of absurdity "Look ye there, gentlemen," says he, pointing to an old oak chair, "there's a curiosity for ye, in that chair the kings of England were crowned, you see also a stone underneath, and that stone is Jacob's pillow" I could see no curiosity either in the oak chair or the stone could I, indeed, behold one of the old kings of England seated in this, or Jacob's head laid upon the other, there might be something curious in the sight, but in the present case, there was no more reason for my surprise, than if I should pick a stone from their steets, and call it a curiosity, merely because one of the kings happened to tread merely because one or an ang, nappend to went upon it as he passed in a procession. From hence our conductor led us through several dark walks and winding ways, uttering les, talking to himself, and flourishing a wand which he held in his hand. He reminded me of the black magicians of Kobi. After we had been almost fatigued with a variety of objects, he at last devide me to consider attentively a certain suit of armour, which seemed variety of objects, he at last desired me to consider attentively a certain suit of armour, which seemed to show nothing remarkable "This armour," said to, "belonged to General Monk"—"Very surprising that a general should wan aimour!"—"And disc."

added he, "observe this cap, this is General Monk's cap"-"Very strange indeed very strange that a general should have a cap also! Pars, friend, what might this cap have cost originally?"_"That, sir." says he. "I don't know, but this cap is all the wages I have for my trouble "-" A very small recompense, truly," said I -" Not so very small," replied he, "for every gentleman puts some money nto it, and I spend the money "—" What, more money still more money !"—" Every gentleman gives comething, siz."—"I'll give thee nothing," returned I, "the guardians of the temple should pay you your wages, friend, and not permit you to squeeze thus from every spectator. When we pay our money at the deer to see a show, no never give more as we are going out Sure, the guardians of the temple can never think they get enough Show me the gate, if I stry longer, I may probably meet with more of those ecclesiastical beggais"

Thus leaving the temple precipitately, I isturned to my lodgings, in order to rummate over what was great, and to despise what was mern, in the occurrences of the day.

XIV

RECEPTION OF THE CHINESE PHILOSOPHLE BY A LADA or Distriction

I was some days ago agreeably surprised by a message from a lady of distinction, who sent me word, that she most passionately desired the pleasuro of my acquaintance, and with the utmost imputionce expected an interview I will not deny, my dear

90

Fum Hoam, but that my vanity was raised at such an invitation: I flattered myself that she had seen me in some public place, and had conceived an affection for my person, which thus induced her My imagination painted her in all the bloom of youth and beauty I fancied her attended by the Loves and Graces, and I set out with the most pleasing expectations of seeing the conquest I had

When I was introduced into her apaitment, my expectations were quickly at an end I perceived a little shrivelled figure indolently reclined on a soft, who nedded, by way of approbation, at my approach This, as I was afterwards informed, was the lady herself,-a woman equally distinguished for rank, politeness, taste and understanding As I was diessed after the fashion of Europe, she had taken me for an Englishman, and consequently saluted me in her ordinary manner but when the footman informed her giace that I was the gentleman from China, she instantly lifted herself from the couch, while her eyes sparkled with unusual vivacity "Bless me can this be the gentleman that was born to far from home? What an unusual share of somethingness in his whole appearance! Loid, how I am charmed with the outlandish cut of his face ! how bewitching the exotic breadth of his forehead! I would give the world to see him in his own country dress Pray, turn about, sir, and let me see you behind There, there's a travelled air for you' You that attend there, bring up a plate of beef cut into small paeces, I have a violent passion to see him eat. Pray, sir, have you got your chop.

to deviate from the usual decorams of the sex made

90 GOL sticks about you

sticks about you! It will be so pretty to see the meat carried to the mouth with a jerk Pray, speak a little Chinese I have lcarned some of the language myself. Lord! have you nothing pretty from China about you, something that one does not know what to do with? I have got twenty things from China that are of no use in the world Look at those rus, they are of the right pea-green these are the furnituro "- 'Dear madam," said I, "these, though they may appear fine in your eves, are but paltry to a Chinese , but as they are useful utensils, it is proper they should have a place in every apartment "--" Useful, sir ! " replied the lady , " sure you mistake, they are of no use in the world "-" What! are they not filled with an infusion of tea, as in China?" replied I -"Quite empty and useless, upon my honour, su "_" Then they are the most cumbrons and clums; furniture in the world, as nothing is tituly elegant but what unites use with beauty"-"I protest," says the lady, "I shall begin to suspect thee of being an actual barbirian suppose you hold my two beautiful pageds in contempt"-" What!" cried I, "has Fohi spread his gross superstitions here also! Pagods of all kinds are my aversion"-"A Chinese, a traveller, and want taste! It surprises me Pray, sir, examine the beauties of that Chinese temple which you see at the end of the garden Is there anything in China more beautiful?"_"Where I stand, I see nothing, madam, at the end of the garden, that may not as well be called an Egyptian pyramid as a Chinese temple, for that little building in view is as like the one as t'other "_" What, sit 1 is not that a Chinese temple? you must surely be mistaken VALUE RECEPTION OF THE PHILOSOPHER Mr Freeze, who designed it, calls it one, and nobody disputes his pretensions to taste" I now

91

found it vain to contradict the lady in anything she though fit to advance, so was resolved rather to act the disciple than the instructor She took me through several rooms, all furnished, as she told me, in the Chinese manner, sprawling dragons, squatting pageds, and clumsy mandarins were stuck upon every shelf in turning round, one must have used caution not to demolish a part of the precarious fui niture In a house like this, thought I, one must live continually upon the watch, the inhabitant must resemble a knight in an enchanted castle, who expects to meet an adventure at every turning

"But, madam," said I, "do not accidents ever happen to all this finery?"-" Man, sn," replied the lady, "is born to misfortunes, and it is but fit I should have a share Three weeks ago, a careless servant snapped off the head of a favourite mandarm: I had scarce done grieving for that, when a monkey bloke a beautiful jar, this I took the more to heart, as the mjury was done me by a friend However, I survived the calamity, when yesterday crash went half-a-dozen dragons upon the marble hearthstone and yet I live, I survive it all you can't conceive what comfort I find under afflictions from philosophy There is Seneca, and Boling broke, and some others, who guide me through life, and teach me to support its calamities." I could not but smile at a woman who makes her own misfortunes, and then deplotes the miseries of her situation Wherefore, tired of acting with dissimulation, and willing to include my meditations in solitade, I took leave just as the servant was bringing in a plete of beef, pursuant to the directions of his mistress.—Adieu.

XV

ENGLISH TREATMENT OF FRENCH PRISONERS

Yer, while I sometimes liment the case of humanity, and the deprayity of human inture, there now and then appear gleams of greatness, that serve to 10-have the eye oppressed with the Indoors prospect, and resemble those calitysted spots that are cometimes found in the midst of an Asiatac wilderiest tee many superior excellences among the English, which A is not in the power of all their follies to hide I see urtues, which in other countries are known only to a few, practised here by every rank of geople

I know not whether it proceeds from their superior opulence that the English are mote charitable than the rest of maximal, whether by being possessed of all the conveniences of life thimselves, they have more lessure to perceive the uneasy attration of the distressed, whatever he tho motive, they are not only the most churtable of any other nation, but most judicious in distinguishing

the properest objects of compassion

In other countries, the giver is generally influenced by the numediate impulse of pitty, his generosity is evorted as nucle to relieve his own nursely sensations as to confort the object in diskress. In England, benefactions no of a more general native. Some men of fortune and universal and the ments of the pelitioners are canvassed by the people; neither passion nor pity find a place in the cool discussion, and charity is then only exerted when it has received the approbation of reason

03

11.12

A late instance of this finely-directed benevolence forces itself so strongly on my imagination, that it more makes me the universal friend of man.

in a manner reconciles mo to pleasure, and once The English and French have not only political reasons to induce them to mutual hatred, but often the more prevailing motive of a private interest to widen the breach A war between other countries is carried on collectively, aimy fights against simy, and a man's own private resentment is lost in that of the community, but in England and France, the individuals of each country plunder each other at sea without redress, and consequently feel that animosity against each other which passengers do at a robber They have for some time carried on an expensive war, and several captives have been taken on both sides. those made pissoners by the French have been used with cruelty and guarded with unnecessary cantion those taken by the English, being much more numerous, were confined in the ordinary manner, and not being released by their countrymen, began to feel all those inconveniences which arise from want of covering and long confinement

Then countrymen were informed of then deplorable situation, but they, more intent on annoying their enemies than reheving their friends, refused the least assistance The English now

san thousands of then fellow catatores starting to every prison, forsaken by those whose duty it was to protect them, labouring with disease, and without clothes to keep off the severity of the senson National benevolence prevailed over unbional animosity, their pursoners were undered enemies, but they were enumes in distance, they corred to be hateful when they no longer continued to be formulable forgetting, therefore, their national hatred, the men who were brave enough to con quer, were generous enough to forgive and they whom all the world seemed to have disclaimed, at last found pity and redress from those they attempted to subdue A subscription us opened, ample charities collected, proper necessaries pro cured, and the poor gay cons of a merry pation were once more taught to resume their former guety

When I east my eye over the list of those who contributed on this occasion, I find the names almost entirely English, scarce one foreigner appears among the number It was for Englishmen alone to be capable of such explicit virtue I own I cannot look over this catalogue of good men and philosophers, without thinking better of miself, because it makes me entertain a more favourable opinion of mankind I am particularly stanck with one who writes these words upon the paper that enclosed his benefaction "The mite of an English man, a citizen of the world, to Frenchmen, priconers of war, and naked." I only wish that he may find as much pleasure from his virtues as I have done m reflecting upon them, that alone will amply reward him Such a one, my friend, is an honour to human nature, he makes no private distinctions of party, all that are stamped with the divine mage of their Creator are friends to him he is a native of the world, and the Emperor of China may be proud that he has such a countryman

To reporce at the destruction of our enemies is a foible grafted upon human nature, and we must be permitted to indulge it . the time way of atoning for such an ill-founded pleasure, is thus to turn our triumph into an act of benevolence, and to testify our own joy by endeavouring to banish anxiety from others

Hamti, the best and wisest emperor that ever filled the throne, after having gained three signal victories over the Tartais, who had invided his dominions, returned to Nankiu, in order to enjoy the glory of his conquest After he had rested for some days, the people, who are naturally fond of processions, impatiently expected the triumphant entry which emperors upon such occasions were accustomed to make then murmurs came to the emperor's ear, he loved his people, and was willing to do all in his power to satisfy their just desires He therefore assured them, that he intended, upon the next feast of the Lanteins, to exhibit one of the most glorious tramphs that had ever been seen in Chin t

The people were in raptures at his condescension, and, on the appointed day, assembled at the gates of the palace with the most eager expectations. Here they waited for some time, without seeing any of those preparations which usually paceede a pageant. The lantern with ten thousand tipers was not yet brought forth, the fineworks, which usually covered the city walls, were not yet lighted the people 11

once more began to marmur at this delay, when, in the midst of their impotence, the palace-gates flew open, and the emperor himself appeared, not in splendour or magnifecenes, but in ordinary habit, followed by the blind, the maimed, and the strangers of the city, all in new clothes, and each carrying in his land money enough to supply his necessities for the year. The people were at first muzed, but soon perceived the wisdom of their king, who taught them, that to make one man happy was more truly great than having ten thousand captures growing at the wheels of his chariot—Adien

IVZ

THE MAN IN BLACK.

Theorem fond of many requantrances, I desire an unimacy only with a few The Man in Black whom I have often mentioned, is one whose fixend-ship I could wish to require, because he possessed my exteem. This manners, it is true, are trunctured with some strange meconsistencies, and he may be justly termed a humorist in a nation of humorists. Though he is generous even to profusion, he effects to be thought a producy of paramony and prudence though his conversation be replete with the most sorded and selfith maxims, his heart is dilated with the most unbounded love. I have known him profess humself a man-inter, while his cheek, was glowing with comprision, and, while his looks were softened into pity, I have heard him use the language of the most unbounded ill nature. Some affect humanify and tenderness, others boast of having such dispositions from nature, but be is the only man I everknew who seemed ashamed of his natural benevolence. He takes as much pains to hide his feelings, as any hypocrite would to conceal his indifference, but on every unguarded moment the mask drops off, and reveals him to the most superficial observer.

In one of our late excursions into the country, happening to discourse upon the provision that was made for the poor in England, he seemed amazed how any of his countrymen could be so foolishly weak as to relieve occasional objects of charity, when the laws had made such ample provision for their support "In every parish-house," says hs, "the poor are supplied with food, clothes, fire, and a bed to lie on , they want no more, I desire no more myself, yet still they seem discontented I am surpused at the inactivity of our magistrates, in not taking up such vagiants, who are only a weight upon the industrious, I am surprised that the people are found to relieve them, when they must be at the Same time sensible that it in some measure encourages idleness, extravagance, and imposture Were I to advise any man for whom I had the least regard, I would caution him by all means not to be imposed upon by their false pietences, let me assure you, sii, they are impostors, every one of them, and rather merit a prison than rehef"

He was proceeding in this strain, earnestly to dissuade me from an improdence of which I am seldom guilty, when an old man, who still had about him the remnants of tattered finery, implored our compassion. He assured us that he was no common beggar, but forced into the shameful profession to support a dying wife and five loungry children. Being prepossessed against such fideshoods, his story had not the lead influence upon not, but if vas unite otherwise with the Man in 1940). I could too it visibly operate upon his countenance, and effectin ally interrupt his horangue. I could craft perceive, that his heart barned to relieve the five starring children, but he seemed ashemed to discour his weakness to me. While he thus heaterful between compassion and paide, I pretended to look another way, and he sented the opportunity of groung the poor petitioner a piece of silver, ladding him at the same time, in order that I should hear, go work for his bread, and not teree precenters with such importment filselect's for the fature.

As he had functed houself quite imperceived, he continued, as we proceeded, to rail against beggets with as much ammosity as before, he throw in some episodes on his own anazing prodence and economy, with his profound skill in discovering importars, he , explained the minner in which he would deal with speggais were he a magistrate, hinted at enlarging some of the pursons for their reception, and told two es of hides that were robbed by beggar men see so of indice that were robbed by beggan men storting beginning a third to the same purpose, when He we with a wooden leg once more crossed our stalks, doing our pits, and blessing out limbs. I walks, doing our without staing any notice, but my was for going our without staing any notice, but my was for going wristfully upon the poor petitioner, finend, hotherd in would show me with how much bid me stops, any time detect an impostor case he could ago, assumed a look of importance, He now, there are no seen to examine the sailor, and in an angle, the degenerate he was thus dis demanding in we began to examine the sailor, and in an angle.

abled and rendered unfit for service. The sailor replied, in a tone as anguly as he, that he had been an officer on board a private shap of war, and that he had lost his leg abroad, in defence of those who did nothing at home At this reply, all my friend's unportance vanished in a moment, he had not a single question more to ask, he new only studied what method he should take to relieve him unobserved He had, however, no easy part to act, as he was obliged to preserve the appearance of illnature before me, and yet relieve hunself by relieving the sailor. Casting, therefore, a furious look upon some bundles of chips which the fellow carried in a string at his back, my friend demanded how he sold his matches , but, not waiting for a reply, desired, in a surly tone, to have a shilling's worth. The sailor seemed at first surprised at his demand, but soon recollecting himself, and presenting his whole bundle, "Here, master," says he, "take all my cargo, and a blessing into the hargain" It is impossible to describe with what an air of triumph my friend marched off with his new purchase, he assured me. that he was furnly of opinion that those fellows must have stolen then goods, who could thus afford to sell them for half value He informed me of several different uses to which those chips might be applied, he expatiated largely upon the savings that would result from lighting candles with a match, instead of thrusting them into the fire. He averred, that he would as soon have parted with a tooth as his money to those rigationds, unless for some valuable consideration I comet tell how long this puregyric upon frugality and matches might have continued, had not his attention been called off by another object more distressful than either of the former A woman in rags, with one child in her sing, and another on her back, was attempting to ing billids, but with such a mournful vence, that at was difficult to determine whether she was surging or cayme. A wickeh, who in the deepest distress still armed at good-humour. was an object my friend was by no means expublish of nathstanding; his smarty and his discour a were instantly interrupted, upon this occasion, his very dissimulation had for alen him liken in my presence he immediately applied his bands to his pockets, in order to relieve her, but gues, his confusion when he found he had already given away all the mency he carried about him to former objects The misery painted in the woman's risige was not half so strongly expressed as the agons in las. He continued to seach for some time, but to no purpose, till at length recollecting hunself, with a fice of meffable good-nature, as ho, had no money, he put into her hands his shilling's worth of in itches

XVII

THE MAN IN BEACH

As there appeared something reductantly good in the character of my companion, I must own it surprised me what could be his motives for thus concealing virtues which others take such pains to display I was unable to repress my dean of knowing the history of a man who thus "comed to act under continual restraint, and whose benevolence was rather the effect of appetate than reason. It was not, however, till after repented solicitations he thought proper to gratify my curiosity. "If you are fond," says he, "of hearing hairbreadth 'scapes; my history must certainly please, for I have been for twenty years upon the very verge of starving. without ever being starved.

"My father, the younger son of a good family, was possessed of a small living in the church. His education was above his fortune, and his generosity greater than his education Poor as he was, he had his flatterers, still poorer than himself, for every dinner he gave them they returned an equivalent in praise, and this was all he wanted. The same ambition that actuates a monarch at the head of an army influenced my father at the head of his table he told the story of the svy-tree, and that was laughed at, he repeated the jest of the two scholars and one pan of breeches, and the company laughed at that, but the story of Tafty in the sedan-chair was suic to set the table in a rear thus his pleasure increased in proportion to the pleasure he gave, he loved all the world, and he fancied all the world loved him

"As his fortune was but small, he lived up to the very extent of it, he had no intentions of leaving his children any money, for that was dross, he was resolved they should have learning, for learning, he used to observe, was better than silver or gold For this purpose, he undertook to instruct us himself; and took as much pass to form our morals as to improve our understanding. We were told, that universal benevolence was what first cemented society . we were taught to consider all the wants of mankind is our own, to legard the human face drine with affician and esteem, he would us up to be mere machines of pity, and rendered us inequable of withstanding the slightest impulse made either by real or fictations distress in a word, we were perfectly instructed in the air of giving away thousands, before we were taught the more necessary qualifications of getting a furthing

"I cannot avoid amagining, that thus refined by his lessons out of all my suspicion, and directed of even all the hitle cuaning which nature had given me, I rusembled, upon my first entrance into the busy and insideus world, one of those gladictors who were exposed without sensor in the explicit that it is a superior discount only seen the world on one and, seemed to triumph in my superior discountment though my whole stock of wisdom consisted in being tobe to talk like himself upon subjects that once were useful, because they were then topics of the busy world, but that now were atterly useless, because connected with the busy world no longer

"The first opportunity he had of finding his expectations disappointed was in the very middling figure I made in the university, he had firstered howest that he alculd soon set me rings into the forenest rank in literary reputation, but we more tried to find use utier? unmoticed and unknown His disappointanen neght have been parity ascribed to his having overned my talents, and parity to my distinct of mythematical revocings, at a time when my integration and memory, yet my desired, were more eager after new objects than desirous of reasoning upon those I have This did not, how good-natmed

ever, please my tutor, who observed, indeed, that I was a little dull, but at the same time allowed, that I seemed to be very good-natured, and had no harm in me

"After I had resided at college seven years, my father died, and left me-his blessing Thus shoved from shore without ill-nature to protect, or cunning to guide, or proper stores to subsist me in so dangerous a voyage, I was obliged to embark in the wide world at twenty-two But, in order to settle in lite, my friends advised (for they always advise when they begin to despise us), they advised me, I say, to go iuto orders

"To be obliged to wear a long wig, when I liked a short one, or a black coat, when I generally dressed in brown, I thought was such a restraint upon my liberty, that I absolutely rejected the proposal A priest in England is not the same mortified creature with a bonze in China with us, not he that fasts best, but eats best, is reckoned the best liver, vet I rejected a life of luxury, indolence, and ease, from no other consideration, but that boyish one of dress So that my friends were now perfectly satisfied I was undone, and yet they thought it a pity for one who had not the least barm in him and was so very

"Poverty naturally begets dependence, and I was admitted as flatterer to a great man At first, I was surprised that the situation of a flatterer at a great man's table could be thought disagreeable there was no great trouble in listening aftentively when his lordship spoke, and laughing when he looked for applause This even good manners might have obliged me to perform I found, however, too soon, always thought you a very silly fellow Let me see —you want two hundred pounds Do you only

106

[xvii

—you want two hundred, sar, exactly i... To confess a truth,' returned I, 'I shall want three hundred; but then I have another french, from whom I can borrow the rest'... Why, then,' replied my friend, 'if you would take my advice (and you know I should not presume to advise you but for your own good), I would recommend it to you to borrow the whole sum from that other friend, and then one note will serve for all, you know'.

serve for all, you know "Povotty now began to come fast upon me, yet instead of growing more provident or cautious as I grow poor, I became every day more indelent and simple. A friend was intested for fifty pounds, I was unable to extreate him, except by becoming his hal. When at libeity, he fled from his creditors, and left me to take his place. In prison I expected greater satisfactions than I enjoyed at large. I hoped to converse with men in this new world, supple and beheving like my-elf, but I found them, as cuining and as crutious as those in the world I had left behind. They spunged up say money while it lasted, burrowed my cools and never pud for them, and cheated me when I played at cribbige. All this was done because they behaved me to be very good-natured, and knew that I had no harm in me. "Upon my first entrance into this mansion, which

"Upon my first entrance into this mansion, which is to some the abode of despair, I felt no sensation different from those I experienced abroad I was now on one side the door, and those who were unconfined were on the other this was all the difference between us At first, indeed, I felt some uneasiness, in considering how I should be able to provide this week for the wants of the week ensuing; but after some time, if I found myself sure of eating one day, I never troubled my head how I was to be supplied another I suzed every precarious meal with the utmost good-humour; indulged no rants of spleen at my situation, never called down Heaven and all the stars to behold me duning upon a half-panny-worth of radishes, my very companious were taught to beheve that I liked salad better than mutton I contented myself with thinking, that all my life I should either eat white bread or brown, considered that all that happened was best, laughed when I was not in pain, took the world as it went, and read Tantus often for want of more hooks and company

"How long I might have continued in this torpid state of simplicity I cannot tell, had I not been roused by seeing an old acquaintance, whom I knew to be a prudent blockhead, pactured to a place in the government I now found that I had pursued a wrong track, and that the true way of heing able to relieve others was first to aim at independence myself my immediate care, therefore, was to leave my present habitation and make an entire reformation in my conduct and behaviour. For a free, open, undesigning deportment, I put on that of closeness, prudence, and economy One of the most heroic actions I ever performed, and for which I shall praise myself as long as I live, was the refusing half-acrown to an old acquaintance, at the time when he wanted it, and I had it to spare for this alone I deserve to be decreed an ovation.

"I now therefore pursued a course of uninterrupted frugality, seldom wanted a dinner, and was con equently mysted to twenty. I soon began to get the character of a caring hund, that had money, and insensibly grew into esteem Neighbours have asked my advice in the disposal of their daughters, and I have always taken care not to give any. I have contracted a frendship with an alderman, only by observing, that if we take a fartling from a thousand pounds, it will be a thousand pounds no longer I have been invited to a prembioher's table, by pre tending to hate gravy; and am now actually upon treaty of marriage with a rich widow, for only having observed thee the hread was meing If ever I am asked a question, whether I know it or not, instead of answering, I only smile and look wise If a charity is proposed, I go about with the hat, but put nothing in myself If a wretch solicits my pity I observe that the world is filled with impostors, and tal e a certain method of not being deceived by never relieving In short, I now find the truest way of finding esteem, even from the indigent, is to give away nothing, and thus have much in our power to giva,"

XVIII

THE PERFICION OF THE CHINFSE IN GARDENING THE GARDINS OF VIRTUE AND VICE

THE English have not yet brought the art of gardening to the same perfection with the Chinese, but have lately began to imitate them. Nature is now followed with greater assiduity than formerly the trees are suffered to shoot out into the utmost luxuriance, the streams, no longer forced from their native heds, are permitted to wind along the valleys, spontaneous flowers take the place of the finished partoric, and the enamelled meadow of the shaven green

xvm] THE GARDENS OF VIRTUE AND VICE

709

Yet still the English are far behind us in this charming at their designers have not yet attained the power of uniting instruction with beauty. A European will scarcely conceive my meaning, when I say that there is scarce a garden in China which does not contain some fine moral, conched under the general design, where one is taught wisdom as he walks, and feels the force of some noble truth, or debeate piecept, resulting from the dispositions of the groves, streams, or grottes Permit me to illustrate what I mean by a description of my gardens at Quams. My heart still hovers round those scenes of former happiness with pleasure, and I find a satisfaction in enjoying them at this distance, though but in magnitation

You descended from the house between two groves of trees, planted in such a manner, that they were impenetrable to the eye, while on each hand the way was adorned with all that was beautiful in poncelam, statuary, and painting. This passage from the house opened into an area surrounded with tooks, flowers, trees and shrubs, but all so disposed as if each was the spontaneous production of nature. As you proceeded forward on this lawn, to your night and left hand were two gates, opposite each other, of very different architecture and design, and hefore you lay a temple, built with rather minute elegance than osternation

The right hand gite was planned with the utmost simplicity, or rather rudeness: ivy clasped round the sequently invited to twenty I soon began to get the character of a saving hunks that had money, and insensibly grew into esteem Neighbours have asked my advice in the disposal of their daughters; and I have always taken care not to give any. I have contracted a frendship with an alderman, only by observing, that if we take a furthing from a thousand pounds, it will be a thousand pounds no longer I have been invited to a pawnbroker's table, by pretending to hate gravy, and am now actually upon treaty of marriage with a nich widow, for only having observed the, the bread was rising If ever I am asked a question, whether I know it or not, mstead of answering, I only smile and look wise If a charity is proposed, I go about with the hat, but put nothing in myself If a wretch solicits my puty I observe that the world is filled with impostors, and take a certain method of not being deceived by never relieving In short, I now find the truest way of finding esteem, even from the indigent, is to give away nothing, and thus have much in our power to g1ve."

TILLAX

The Perfection of the Chinese in Gardening
The Gardens of Viptue and Vice

The English have not yet brought the art of gardening to the same perfection with the Chinese, but have lately begun to imitate them. Nature is now followed with greater assiduity then formerly the trees are suffered to shoot out into the utmost luxunance, the streams, no longer forced from THE GARDENS OF VIRTUE AND VICE 109 their native beds, are permitted to wind along the valleys, spontaneous flowers take the place of the finished parterie, and the enamelled meadow of the shaven green.

Yet still the English are far behind us in this charming at their designers have not yet attained the power of unting instruction with beauty. A European will sourcely conceive my meaning, when I say that there is scarce a garden in China which does not contain some fine moral, couched under the general design, where one is taught wisdom as he walks, and feels the force of some noble truth, or delicate precept, resulting from the dispositions of the groves, streams, or grottes. Permit me to illustrate what I mean by a description of my gardens at Quamsi. My heart still hovers round those scenes of former happiness will pleasure, and I find a satisfaction in enjoying them at this distance, though but in imagination.

You descended from the honse between two groves of trees, planted in such a manner, that they were impenetrable to the eye, while on each hand the way was adorned with all that was beautiful in potcelain, statuaty, and printing This presige from the house opened into an acea surrounded with rocks, flowers, trees and shrubs, but all so desposed as if each was the spontaneous production of nature As you proceeded forward on this lawn, to your right and left hand wore two gates, opposite each other, of very different architecture and design, and before you lay a temple, built with rather minute elegance than ostentation

The right hand gate was planned with the utmost simplicity, or rather rudeness wy clasped round the

110

-Pervia Virturi

entertainment

pillars, the baleful eypress hung over it, time seemed to have destroyed all the smoothness and regularity of the stone, two champions, with lifted clubs, appeared in the act of guarding its access! diagons and serpents were seen in the most hideous attitudes, to deter the spectator from ap proaching, and the perspective view that lay behind seemed dark and gloomy to the last degree, the stranger was tempted to enter only from the motto,

The opposite gate was formed in a very different manner, the architecture was light, elegant, and inviting flewers hung in wreaths round the pillars, all was finished in the most exact and masterly manner, the very stone of which it was built still preserved its polish, nymphs, wrought by the hand of a master, in the most alluring attributes, beckoned the stranger to approach, while all that lay behind, as far as eye could reach, seemed gay, luxuriant, and capable of affording endless pleasure The motto itself contributed to invite him; for over the gate were written these words-FACILIS DESCENSUS By this time I fancy you begin to perceive that the gloomy gate was designed to represent the road to Virtue, the opposite the more agreeable passage to Vice It is but natural to suppose, that the spectator was always tempted to enter by the gate which offered him so many allurements I always m these cases left him to his choice, but generally found that he took to the left, which promised most Immediately upon his entering the gate of Vice the trees and flowers were disposed in such a manner as to make the most pleasing impression, but, as he walked farther on, he insensibly found the garden assume the ain of a wilderness—the landscapes began to darken—he appeared to go downwards—frightful rocks seemed to lang over his head—gloomy caverns, inexpected precipices, awful runs, heaps of unburied bones, and terrifying sounds, heaps of unburied bones, and terrifying sounds, caused by unseen waters, began to take the place of what at first appeared so lovely, it was in vain to attempt returning, the labyinth was too much perplexed for any but myself to find the way back. In short, when sufficiently impressed with the horrors of what he saw, and the improdence of his choice, I brought him by a hidden door a shorter way hack into the area from whence at first he had stayed.

The gloomy gate new presented itself before the stranger, and though there seemed little in its appearance to tempt his curiosity, yet, encouraged by the motto, he gradually proceeded The darkness of the entrance, the frightful figures that seemed to obstruct his way, the trees of a mounful green, con spued at first to disgust him as he went forward, however, all began to open and wear a more pleas-ing appearance, beautiful cascides, beds of flowers, trees loaded with finit or blo-soms, and unexpected brooks, improved the scene, he now found that he was ascending, and as he proceeded all nature grew more beautiful the prospect widened as he went higher, even the air itself seemed to become more pure Thus, pleased and happy from unexpected beauties, I at last led him to an arbour, from whence he could view the garden and the whole country around, and where he might own, that the road to Virtue terminated in happiness

"At length, however, an unhappy youth, more aspining than the rest, undertook to climb the mountain's side and examine the summits which were hitherto deemed maccessable. The inhabitants from below gazed with wonder at his interpublity, some applauded his courage, others censued his folly still, however, he proceeded towards the place where the earth and heavens seemed to unite, and at length arrived at the wisbed-for height with extreme labour and assiduity.

"His first surprise was to find the skies not, as he before His amazement menessed when he saw wide extended region lying on the opposite side of the mountain, but it iose to astonishment when he beheld a country, at a distance, more beautiful and alliuming than even that he had just left behind

"As he continued to gaze with wonder, a Genius with a look of infinite modesty, approaching, offered to be his guide and instructor 'The distant country which you so much admire,' says the angelic being, 'is called the LAND OF CERTAINTY in that chairning retreat sentiment contributes to refine every sensual banquet, the inhabitants are blessed with every solid enjoyment, and still more blessed in a perfect consciousness of their own fehrity ignorance in that country is wholly unknown, all there is satisfaction without alloy, for every pleasure first undergoes the examination of reason. As for me, I am called the Genius of Demonstration, and am stationed here in order to conduct every adventurer to that land of happiness, through those intervening regions you see overhung with fogs and darkness, and horrid with forests, cataracts, caveins, and various other shapes of danger. But follow me, and me time I may lead you to that distant desirable land of tranquillity.

"The intrepid traveller immediately put himself under the direction of the Genius, and both journeying on together with a slow but agreeable pace, deceived the tediousness of the way by conversation The beginning of the journey seemed to promise true satisfaction, but, as they proceeded forward, the skies became more gloomy and the way more intricate, they often madvertently approached the brow of some frightful precipice, or the brink of a torrent, and were obliged to measure back their former way . the gloom increasing as they proceeded, their pace became more slow, they paused at every step, frequently stumbled, and their distrust and timidity increased The Genius of Demonstration now therefore advised his pupil to grope upon hands and feet, as a method, though more slow, yet less liable to error

"In this manner they attempted to pursue their journey for some time, when they were overtaken by mucher Genus, who with a precipitate pace seemed travelling the same way. He was instantly known by the other to be the Genus of Probability. He wore two wide-extended wings at his back, which accessantly waved, without increasing the rapidity of his motion, his countenance bettayed a confidence that the ignorant might mistake for sincerity, and he had but one eye, which was fixed in the middle of his forchead.

"'Servant of Hormoda," eried he, approaching the moutal palgram, if thou art travelling to the LAND OF CERTAINT, how is it possible to arrive these under the guidance of a Gemus who proceeds forward so slowly, and as so little acquainted with the way? Follow me, we shall soon perform the journey to whenevery pleasure waits our arrival?

"The peremptory tone in which this Genius spoke, and the speed with which he inoved forward, induced the traveller to change his conductor, and leaving his modest comprision behind, he proceeded forward with his more confident director, seeming not a little pleased at the increased velocity of his motion.

"But soon he found reason to repent. Whenever a torrent crossed their way, his gonde taught him to despise the obstacle by plunging him in; whenever a precipice presented, he was directed to fling himself forward. Thus each moment immediately escaping, his repeated escapes only served to increase his gondo's tementy. He led him, therefore, for ward, amids infinite difficulties, till they arrived at the borders of an ocean, which appeared unnavigable from the black mists that lay upon its surface. Its inquiret waves were of the darkest line, and gave a lively representation of the various agitation of the human mind.

"The Genus of Probability now confessed his temently, owned his being an improper guide to the LAND OF CERTAINT, a country where no mortal had even been permitted to arrive, but, at the sume time, offered to supply the traveller with another conductor, who should earry him to the LAND OF CONTIDENCE, a region where the inhabitant's lived with the atmost trioquibity, and tested almost us much astachaction as if in the LAND OF CENTAINTY Not waiting for a reply, he stunged three times on the effected what other means could not perform. For now he heard hunself welcomed on every side to the promised lund, and an universal shout of joy was sent forth at his safe arrival. The wearied traveller, desirous of seeing the long wished-for country, at length pulled the fillet from his cyes, and ventured to look round him. But he had unloosed the band too soon, he was not yet above half way over. The Demon, who was still hovering in the air, and had produced those sounds only in order to deceare, was now freed from his commission, wherefore, throwing the astorished traveller from his back, the unbappy youth fell headlong into the subjected to detail headlong into the subject to cean to nousers, from whence he never after was seen to

XX

EXCELLENCE OF BRITISH JUSTICE

Whin Pilmenie, the Glecun, had done something which exacted a universal shout from the surrounding multitude, he was instantly struck with the doubt, that what had their approbation must culturly be wrong, and turning to a philosophet who stood near him, "Pray, sn;" says he, "pirdon me, I fear I have been guilty of some absurdity".

You know that I am, not less than him, a despiser of the multitude, you know that I equally detest flattery to the great, yet so many circumstances have concurred to give a lustic to the latter part of the present English monach's reign, that I cannot avoid acknowledging the crowd, for once, just in their mammoors approbation

Yet think not that battles grined, dominion extended, or enemies brought to submission, are the virtues which at present claim my admiration Were the reigning monarch only famous for his victories, I should regard his character with indufference the hoast of heroism in this enlightened age is justly regarded as a qualification of a very subordinate rank, and mankind how begin to look with accoming horror on these foes to man The virtue in this aged monarch which I have at present in view is one of a much more exalted nature, is one of the most difficult attainment, is the least praised of all kingly virtues, and yet deserves the greatest praise, the virtue I mean is JUSTICE -a strict administration of justice, without severity and without favour

Of all virtues this is the most difficult to be practised by a king who has a power to pardon All men, even tyrants themselves, lean to mercy when unbiassed by passions or interest, the heart naturally persuades to forgiveness, and pursuing the dictates of this pleasing deceiver, we are led to prefer our private satisfaction to public utility What a thorough love for the public, what a strong command over the passions, what a finely-conducted judgmout, must be possess, who opposes the dictates of reason to those of his heart, and prefers the future interest of his people to his own immediate satisfaction 1

If still to a man's own natural bias for tenderness we add the numerous solicitations made by a cuminal's friends for mercy, if we survey a king not only opposing his own feelings, but reluctantly refusing those he regards, and this to satisfy the public, whose cires he may never hear, whose gratitude he may never receive, this smely is true greatness? Let us fancy correctives for a moment in this just old man's place? surrounded by numbers all sobeting the same favour—a favour that nature disposes us to grant, where the inducements to pray are laid before us in the strongest light, supplying at our feet, some ready to rescrib a refusal, none opposing a compliance, let us, I say, suppose ourselves in such a situation, and I fruity we should find ouiselves more agt to act the character of good natured men then of upright magnitudes.

What contributes to rune justice above all other kingly varius is, that it is seldom attended with a due share of applause, and those who practise it must be influenced by greater motives than empty fame the people are generally well pleased with a remission of panishment, and all that wears the appearance of humanty, it is the wise alone who are capable of decising that impurital justice is the truest merey they know it to be very difficult it once to compassionate, and yet condemn, in object that the defort tenderness

I have been led into this commonplace trum of thought by a lite striking instance in this country of the impartitulity of justice, and of the king's inflictible resolution of inflicting parasitinent where it was justify due A man of the first quality, in a fit either of passion, melancholy, or madness nucleared his severant it was exprected that his station in life would have lessened the ignorancy of his panishmant, however, he was arrugued, condemned and underneat the same degrading death with the member selected. It was well considered that virtue alone is true nobility, and that he, whose actions sink him even beneath the vulgar, has no right to those distinctions which should be the rewards only of merit it was perhaps considered that crimes were more hemous among the higher classes of people, as necessity exposes them to fewer temptations

Over all the East, even China not excepted, a person of the same quality, guilty of such a crime, unght by giving up a share of his fortune to the judge, buy off his sentence. There are several countiles, even in Europe, where the servant is entirely the property of his master if a slave kills his lord. he dies by the most excruenting tortures, but if the circumstances are reversed, a small fine buys off the punishment of the offender Happy the country where all are equal and where those who sit as judges have too much integrity to receive a bribe, and too much honour to pity, from a similitude of the prisoner's title or circumstances with their own ! Such is England: yet think not that it was always equally famed for this strict impartiality. There was a time, even here, when title softened the rigours of the law, when dignified wietches were suffered to hve, and continue for years an equal disgrace to justice and nobility

To this day, in a neighbouring country, the great are often most scandalously pardoned for the most scandalous offences A person is still alive amono them who has more than once descrived the most ignominious severity of instice. His being of the blood royal, however, was thought a sufficient atonement for his being a disgrace to humanity This remarkable personage took pleasure in shooting at the passengers from the top of his palace, and in this most princely amusement he usually spent some time every day. He was at length arrangined by the friends of a person whom in this manner he had killed, was found guilty of the charge, and condemned to die. His merciful monaich paidoned him, in consideration of his rank and quality. The unrepenting criminal soon after renewed his usual entertainment, and in the same manner killed another man He was a second time condemned . and, strange to think, a second time received his majesty's pardon! Would you believe it! A third time the very same man was guilty of the very same offence a thud time, therefore, the laws of his country found him guilty-I wish, for the honour of humanity, I could suppress the rest-a third tame he was paidoned! Will you not think such a story too extraordinary for belief? Will you not think me describing the savage inhabitants of Congo? Alas! the story is but too true, and the country where it was transacted regards itself as the politest in Europe !-Adieu

XXL

ENGLISH LIBERTY

Ask an Englishman what nation in the world enjoys most freedom, and he immediately answers, his own Ask him in what that freedom principally consists, and he is instantly silent. This happy pre-eminence does not aire from the people's enjoying a larger share in legislation than elsewhere, for in this particular several states in Europe excel them, nor does it arise from a greater exemption from taxes, for few countries pay more, it does not proceed from their being restrained by fewer laws, for no people are burdened with so many, nor does it particularly consist in the security of their property, for property is pretty well secured in every polite state in Europe

How, then, are the English more free—for more free they certainly are—than the people of any other country, or under any other form of government whatever? Their freedom consists in their enjoying all the advantages of democracy, with this superior preognitive borrowed from monarchy, that the seventy of their laws may be iclased without endangeing the constitution

In a monarchical state, in which the constitution is strongest, the laws may be relaxed without danger, for though the people should be unanimous in the breach of any one in particular, yet still there is an effective power superior to the people, capable of enforcing obedience, whenever it may be proper to inculcate the law either towards the support or welfare of the community

But in all those governments where laws derive their sanction from the people alone, transgressions cannot be overlooked without bringing the constitution into danger. They who transgress the law in such a case are those who prescribe it, by which means it loses not only its influence, but its sanction. In every republic the laws must be strong, because the constitution is feeble, they must resemble an Asiatic husband, who is justly jealous, because be knows himself impotent. Thus, in Holland, Switzenland, and Genos, new laws are not frequently enacted, but the old ones are observed with innemating sevenity. In such republics, therefore, the people are slaves to laws of their own making, little less than in unusued monarchies, where they are slaves to the will of one subject to imility, like themselves.

In England, from a variety of happy acadents, their constitution is just betong enough, or, if you will, monachical enough, to permit a relaxation of the severity of laws, and yet those laws still to remain sufficiently strong to govern the people. This is the most perfect state of civil librity of which we can form any idea, here we see a greater number of laws than in any other country while the people at the same time obey only such as are immediately conducate to the interests of somety, soveral are unnoticed, many unknown, some kept to be revised and enforced upon proper occasions, others left to grow obsolete, even without the necessity of abrogation.

There is scarcely an Englishman who does not almost every day of his life offend with imprinity against some expices law, and for which, in a certain conjuncture of excumstances, he would not receive pumbinent. Gaming-houses, preaching at prohibited places, assembled crowds, nocturnal amusements, public shows, and a hundred other instances, are forbid and frequented. These prohibitions are useful, though it be prudent in their magistrates, and happy for the people, that they are not ordered, and more but the venil or negrenary attempt to enforce them.

The law in this case, like an indulgent parent, still keeps the rod, though the child is seldom corrected. Were those pardoned offences to rise into enomity, were they likely to obstruct the happiness of society, or endanger the state, it is then that justice would resume her teriors, and punish those faults she had so often overlooked with indulgence. It is to this ductility of the laws that an Englishman oves the freedom he enjoys superior to others in a more popular government every step, therefore, the constitution takes toward a democratic form every duminution of the regal authority, is, in fact, a diminution of the subject's freedom, but every attempt to render the government more popular not only impairs natural liberty, but even will at last dissolve the political constitution.

Every popular government seems calculated to last only for a time it grows rigid with rage, new laws are multiplying, and the old continue in force, the subjects are oppressed, buildened with a multiplicity of legal injunctions, there are none from whom to expect redress, and nothing but a strong convulsion in the state can vindicate them into former liberty thus the people of Rome, a few great ones excepted, found more real freedom under their emperors, though tyrants, than they had experienced in the old age of the commonwealth, in which their laws were become numerous and painful, in which new laws were every day enacting, and the old ones executed with rigour They even refuse to be remstated in their former prerogatives, upon an offer made them to this purpose, for they actually found emperors the only means of softening the nigous of their constitution

The constitution of England is at preserve possessed of the strength of its native oak and the flashibit of the heading tamanaks, but should possessed of the strength of its native oak and the fleatbility of the bending tamiurisk; but should the people at any time, with a mistaken seal, pint after an imaginary freedom, and fancy that abridging monarchy was increasing these privileges, they mg monatch was increasing these privileges, they would be very much mistaken, since every jewel plucked from the crown of majesty would only be mide use of as a bribe to corruption, it might entit the few who shired it among them, but would in fact unpoverish the public.

degree, became masters of the people, yet still flattered them with a show of freedom, while themselves only were free so it is possible for a body of men, while they stind up for purileges, to grow into in esuberrace of power them-elves, and the public become actually dependent, while some of its individuals only govern

As the Roman senators, by slow and imperceptible

If then, my friend, there should in this country over be on the throne a king who, through goodnature or uge, should give up the smallest part of his pa regulate to the people. If there should come a minister of north and popularity—but I have room for no more—Adou

XXII

THE PHILOSOPHER IS VISITED BY A BOOKSELLER

As I was yesterday seated at heakfast over a pensive dish of tea, my meditations were interrupted by my old finend and companion, who introduced a stranger dressed pretty much like himself. The gontleman made several apologies for his visit, begged of me to impute his intrusion to the sincerity of his respect and the warmth of his curiosity.

As I am very suspectous of my company when I find them very envil without any apparent reason, I answered the stranger's carosess at first with reserve, which my friend perceiving, instantly let me into my visitant's trade and character, asking Mr Fudge, whether he had lately published anything new? I now conjectured that my guest wae no other than a bookseller, and his answer confirmed my suspectors

"Excuse me, str," says be, "it is not the serson, books have their time as well as encumbers. I would no more bring out a new work in summer, than I would sell pork in the dog days. Nothing in my way goes off in summer, except very light goods indeed. A review, a magazine, or a sessions paper, may amuse a summer reader, but all our stock of value we reserve for a spring and winter tride."—"I must confeet, sir," said I, "a currosity to know what you call a valuable stock, which can only bear a winter perusal"—"Su," replied the bookseller. "it is not my way to cry up my own goods, but

130

published?" cried I -" Sir, the book was published in order to be sold, and no book sold better, except the criticisms upon it, which came out soon after of all kinds of writing, that goes off best at present, and I generally fasten a cuiticism upon every selling book that is published business "-" To what purpose was the book then

"I once had an author who never left the least opening for the critics close was the word, always very right and very dull, ever on the safe side of an argument, yet, with all his qualifications, incapable of coming into faveur I soon perceived that his hent was for criticism, and, as he was good for nothing else, supplied him with pens and paper, and planted him, at the beginning of every month, as a censor on the works of others. In short I found him a treasure, no ment could escape him but what is most remarkable of all, he ever wrote hest and bitterest when drunk "-" But me there not some works," interrupted I, "that, from the very manner of their composition, must be exempt from enticiem, particularly such as profess to disregard its laws!"-" There is no work whatsoever but he can criticise," replied the bookseller, " even though you wrote in Chinese, he would have a pluck at you Suppose you should take it into your head to publish a book, let it be a volume of Chinese letters, for instance, write how you will, he shall show the world you could have written better Should you, with the most local exactness, stick to the manners and customs of the country from whence you come. should you confine yourself to the namow limits of Eastern knowledge, and be perfectly simple and perfectly natural, he has then the strongest reason

XXII] THE PHILOSOPHER AS A BOOKSELLER 131 to exclaim. He may with a sneer, send you back to Clima for leaders. He may observe that, after the first or second letter, the iteration of the same simplicity is insupportably tedous; but the worst of all is, the public, in such a case, will anticipate his censures, and leave you, with all your uninstructive simplicity, to be mauled at discretion "Yes," cried I, "but in order to avoid his indignation, and, what I should fear more, that of the public, I would, in such a case, write with all the knowledge I was master of As I am not possessed of much learning, at least I would not suppress what little I had; nor would I appear more stupid than nature has made me."—"Here, then," cries the book-aller, "we should have you entirely in our power unmatural, un-Eastern, quite out of character, erroneously sensible, would be the whole ory Sir, we should then hunt you down like a rat."—"Head of my father!" said I, "sure there are but two ways, the door must either are but or it must bo open. I must either be natural or unnatural "—

"Be what you will, we shall criticise you." returned the bookseller, "and prove you a dance in spite of your teeth But, sir, it is time I should come to business I have just now in the press a history of China, and if you will but just your name to it as the author, I shall pay the obligation with gratitude "—" What sir " rephed I, "put my name to a work which I have not written? Never! while I return a proper respect for the public and myself"
The bluntness of my reply quite abuted the ardour of the bookseller's conversation, and, after about half an hour's disagreeable re-erve, he, with some cere mour, took his leve and withdrow—Adreu

mxx

THE PRESENT SITUATION OF THE SEVERAL STATES OF EUROPE

The distant sounds of music, that eatch new sweetness as they vibrate through the long-drawn valley, are not more pleasing to the ear than tidings of a far distant friend

I have just received two hundred of thy letters by the Russian caravan, descriptive of the manners of Europe You have left it to geographers to determine the site of their mountains and extent of their lakes, seeming only employed in discovering the genus, the government, and disposition of the people

In those letters I perceive a journal of the operations of your mind upon whaterer occurs, rather than a detail of your travels from one building to another of your trking a draft of this ruin, or that obehisk; of paying so many tomans for this commodity, or laying up a proper store for the passage of some new villetness.

From your accounts of Russia, I learn that this nation is again relaxing into pristane burbuity; that its great emperor wanted a life of an hundred years more to bring about his tast designs. A savage people may be resembled to their own forests, a few years are sufficient to clear away the forests, a few years are sufficient to clear away the ground acquires a proper degree of fertility the Russians, attached to their anoient prejudices, aguin tenew their listed to strangers, and midulge every former brutal excess. So true it is, that the revolutions of wisdom are slow and difficult, the levolutions of folly or ambition precipitate and easy "We are not to be astomished," any Confucius, "that the wise walk more slowly in them road to virtue, than fools in their pressage to vice, since passion drags us along, while wisdom only points the way."

The German empire, that remnant of the majesty of ancient Rome, appears, from your accounts, on the eve of dissolution. The members of its vast body want every tie of government to unite them, and seem feebly held together only by their respect for anomen institutions. The very name of country and countrymen, which in other nations makes one of the strongest bonds of government, has been here for some time hald aside, each of its inhabitant's seeming more proud of being called from the potty state which gives him birth than by the well-knewn title of German.

This government may be regarded in the light of a severe master and a feeble opponent. The states which are now subject to the laws of the empire, are only watching a proper occasion to fing off the yoke, and those which are become too powerful to be compelled to obedience, now begin to think of dictating in their turn. The struggles in this state are, therefore, not in order to preserve, but to destroy, the ancient constitution, if one side succeeds, the government must become despotic, if the other, several states will subsist, without even nominal subordination but in either case the Germanic constitution will be no more

Sweden, on the contrary, though now seemingly

a strenuous assertor of its liberties, is probably only hastening on to despotism. Then senators while they pretend to vindwate the freedom of the people, are only establishing their own independence. The deluded people will, however, at last perceive the miseries of an aristociatical government, they will perceive that the administration of a society of men is ever more painful than that of one only They will fly from this most oppressive of all forms, where one single member is capable of controlling the whole, to take refuge under the throne, which will ever be attentive to their complaints. No people long endure an aristocratical government, when they can apply elsewhere for redress. The lower orders of people may be englayed for a time by a number of tyrants, but, upon the first opportunity, they will ever take a leftige in despotism or democracy

As the Swedes are making concealed approaches to despotem, the French, on the other hand, are unperceptibly vandeating themselves into freedom When I consider that those pulmments (the members of which are all created by the court, the presidents of which can act only by immediate direction) presume even to mention privileges and freedom, who, till of late, received instruction to the thones with implies themsity, when this is considered, I cannot help faneying that the genus of freedom has entired that langdom in disguise If they have but these work monuchs more successively on the throne, the mick will be laid aside, and the country will once more be free

When I compare the figure which the Dutch

make in Europe with that they assume in Asia, I am struck with surprise In Asia, I find them the great lords of all the Indian seas; in Europe, the timid inhabitants of a paltry state. No longer the sons of freedom, but of avarice, no longer assertors of their rights by courage, but by negotiations, fawning on those who insult them, and crouching under the rod of every neighbouring power. Without a friend to save them in distress, and without virtue to save themselves, their government is poor, and their private wealth will serve but to invite some neighbouring invador

I long with impatience for your letters from England, Denmark, Holland, and Italy? yet why wish for relations which only describe new calamities, which show that ambition and avarice are equally torrible in every region !-Adieu.

XXIV.

LESSONS TO A YOUTH ENTERING THE WORLD

The news of your freedom lifts the load of former anxiety from my mind, I can now think of my son without regret, appland his resignation under calamities, and his conduct m extracting himself from them

You are now free, just lot loose from the bondage of a hard master this is the crisis of your fate, and as you now manage fortune, succeeding life will be marked with happiness or misery. A few years' perseverance in prudence, which at your age is 136

but another name for virtue, will ensure comfort, pleasure, tranquility, esteem, too pager an enjoyment of every good that now offers will reverse the medal, and present you with poverty, anxiety, 1emorse, contempt As it had been observed, that none are better qualified to give others advice, than those who have taken the least of it themselves, so in this respect I find myself perfectly authorised to offer mine, even though I should waive my paternal authority upon this occasion

The most usual way among young men who have no resolution of their own is, first to ask one friend's advice, and follow at for some time, then to ask advice of another, and turn to that, so of a third still unsteady, always changing However, be assured, that every change of this nature is for the worse people may tell you of your being mifit for some peculiar occupations in life, but heed them not, whatever employment you follow with persevertuce and assiduty will be found fit for you, it will be your support in youth, and comfort in age In learning the useful part of every profession very moderate abilities will suffice, even if the mind be a little balanced with simpidity, it may in this case be useful. Great abilities have always been less serviceable to the possessors than moderate ones Life has been compared to a lace, but the allusion still immoves by observing, that the most swift are ever the least manageable

To know one profession only, is enough for one man to know, and this (whatever the professors may tell you to the contrary) is soon learned Be contented, therefore, with one good employment, for if you undertake two at a time, people will give you business in neither

A conjurer and a tailor once happened to converse together "Alas !" erres the tailor, "what an unhappy poor creature am I, if people should ever take it in their heads to live without clothes I am undone, I have no other trade to have recourse to" -"Indeed, friend, I pity you sincerely," replied the conjurer, "but, thank Heaven, things are not quite so bad with me, for if one tank should fail, I have a hundred tricks more for them yet However, if at any time you are reduced to beggary, apply to me, and I will relieve you" A famine overspread the land, the tailor made a chift to live, because his customers could not be without clothes, but the poor conjurer, with all his hundred tricks, could find none that had money to throw away it was in vain that he promised to gat tire, or to vomit pins, no single creature would relieve him, till he was at last obliged to beg from the very tailor whose calling he had to merly despised

There are no obstructions more fatal to fortune than pude and resentment. If you must resent requires at all, at least suppress your indignation and then show away the resentment of a poor man is like the efforts of a harmless insect to sting, it may get him croshed, but cannot defend him. Who values that anger which is consumed only in empty menaces?

Once upon a time a goose fed its young by a pond side, and a goose, in such encountances, is always extremely proud, and excessively punctilions. If any other animal, without the least design to offend, happened to pass that way, the goose was in

mediately at him The pond, she said, was hers, and she would maintain a right in it, and support her honour, while she had a bill to hiss, or a wing to flutter. In this manner she drove away ducks, pigs, and chickens, nay, even the insidious cat was seen to scamper A longing mastiff, however, happened to pass by, and thought it no harm if he should lap a little of the water, as he was thirsty The guardian goose flow at him like a fury, pecked at mm with her beak, and flapped him with her feathers The dog grew angry, and had twenty times a good mind to give her a sly snap, but suppressing his indignation, because his master was nigh, "Plague take thee," cries he, "for a fool! sure those who have neither strength nor weapons to fight, at least should be evvil that fluttering and hissing of thine may one day get thine head snapped off, but it can neither injure thy enemies, no: ever protect thee" So saying, he went forward to the pond, quenched his thirst in spite of the goose, and followed his master

Another obstruction to the fortune of youth is, that while they are willing to take offence from none, they are also equally desirous of giving nobody offence. From hence they endeavout to please all, comply with every request, attempt to suit them solves to every company, have no will of their own, but, like wax, catch every configuous impression. By thus attempting to give universal satisfaction, they at last find themselves imseculty disappointed to bring the generality of admires on on side, it is sufficient to attempt pleasing a very few.

A number of commence was once is evolved to finish

A painter of eminence was once resolved to finish a piece which should please the whole would When, therefore, he had drawn a picture, in which his utmost skill was exhausted, it was exposed in the public market-place, with directions at the bottom for every spectator to mark with a brush, which lay by, every limb and feature which seemed erroneous, The spectators came, and in general applauded, but each, willing to show his talent at criticism, marked whatever he thought proper At evening, when the painter came, he was mortified to find the whole picture one universal blot-not a single stroke that was not stigmatized with marks of disapprobation not satisfied with this trial, the next day he was resolved to try them in a different manner, and, exposing his picture as before, desired that every spectator would mark those beauties he approved or admired The people complied; and the artist returning, found his picture replete with the marks of beauty every stroke that had been yesterday condemned, now received the character of approbation. "Well," cries the painter, "I now find that the best way to please one half of the world, is not to mind what the other half says, since what are faults in the eyes of these, shall be by those regarded as beautics"-Adieu.

XXV

THE GREAT EXCHANGE HAPPINESS FOR SHOW

The places of Europe have found out a manner of rewarding their subjects who have behaved well, by presenting them with about two yards of blue

riband, which is worn about the shoulder. They who are honoured with this mark of distinction are called Luights, and the king himself is always the head of the order The is a very frugal method of recompensing the most important services, and it is very fortunate for kings that their subjects are satisfied with such trilling rowards. Should a nobleman lappen to lose his leg in a battle, the king mesents him with two yards of riband, and he is prid for the loss of his lumb, Should an unlassador spend all his paternal fortune in supporting the honom of his country abroad, the king presents him with two yards of riband, which is to be considered as an equivalent to his estate In short, while an European ling has a yaid of blue or green riband left, he need be under no apprehensions of wanting statesmon, generals, and soldiera

I cunnot sufficiently admire those kingdoms in which non with large patinonal estates are willing thus to undergo acal hardships for empty favour. A person, already possessed of a compotent fortune, who undertakes to enter the career of ambition, feels many real inconveniences from his station, while it procures him to real happiness that he was not possessed of before. He could cit, drink, and sleep, before he became a courtier, as well, peshaps better, than when invested with his authority. He could command flatterers in a private station, as well as in his public capacity, and midlige at home every favourits inclination, uncommed and unseen by the popule.

What real good, then, does an addition to a fortune already sufficient procure? Not any

Could the great man, by having his fortune increased, increase also his appetites, then precedence might be attended with real amusement

Was he, by having his one thousand made two, thus enabled to enjoy two wives, or est two dinners, then indeed he might be excused for undergoing some pain in order to extend the sphere of his enjoyments. But, on the contrary, he finds his desire for pleasure often lessen, as he takes pains to be able to improve it, and his capacity of enjoyment diminishes as his fortune happens to increase.

Instead, therefore, of regarding the great with envy, I generally consider them with some share of compassion I look upon them are a set of good natured, misguided people, who are indebted to us, and not to themselves, for all the happiness they enjoy. For our pleasure, and not then own, they sweat under a cumbrous beap of finery, for our pleasure, the lacqueyed train, the slow-parading pageant, with all gravity of grandem, moves in review a single coat, or a single footman, answers all the purposes of the most indolent refinement as well, and those who have twenty, may be said to keep one for their own pleasure, and the other numeteen merely for ours. So true is the observation of Confucius, "That we take greater pains to persuade others that we are happy, than in endeavouring to think so ourselves."

But though this desire of being seen, of being made the subject of discourse, and of supporting the dignities of an exalted station, be troublesome enough to the imbitious, yet it is noll for somety that there are men thus willing to exchange ease and safety for danger and a libind. We lose nothing by their vanity, and it would be unkind to endeavour to deprive a child of its intile. If a duke or a duches are willing to carry a long train for our entertainment, so much the worse for themselves, if they choose to exhibit in public, with a hundred lacqueys and mamelukes in their equipage, for our entertainment, still so much the worse for themselves, it is the speciators alone who give and receive the pleasure, they only are the sweating figures that swell the pageant

A mandain, who took much pride in appearing with a number of jewels on every part of his robe, was occo accosted by an old sly honze, who, following him through several streets, and bowing often to the ground, thanked him for his jewels. What does the man mean?" cried the mandarin "Friend, I never gave thee any of my jewels."—"No," replied the other; "hut you have let me look at them, and that is all the use you can make of them yourself, so there is no difference between us, except that you have the trouble of watching them, and that is an employment I don't much desire"—Adjeu

XXVI

FORTUNE IS PLOVED TO BE NOT BLIND

THE Europeans are themselves blind, who describe Fortune without sight. No first-rate heauty ever had fine eyes, or saw more clearly they who have no other trade but seeking their fortune, need never hope to find her, coquette-like, she files from her pursuers, and at last fixes on the plodding mechanic, who stays at home, and minds his business

I am amazed how men call het blind, when, by the company the keeps, the seems so very di-cenning. Wherever you see a gaming-table, be very sure Fortune is not there, wherever you see a house with the doors open, be sure Fortune is not there, when you see a man whose pecket holes are laced with gold, be satisfied Fortune is not there wherever you see a beautiful woman good-natured and obliging, be convinced Fortune is never there. In short, she is ever seen accompanying industry, and as often trundling a wheelbarrow as lolling in a coach and six.

If you would make Fortune your friend, or, to personize her no longer, if you desire, my son, to be nich, and have money, be more eager to save than acquire when people say, Money is to be got here, acquire when people say, stoney is to be got her, and money is to be got there, take no notice, mind your own business, sfay where you are, and secure all you can get without sturing. When you hear that your neighbour has picked up a purse of gold in the street, never run out into the same street, looking about you in order to pick up such another, or when you are informed that he has made a for tune in one branch of busines, never change your own in order to be his rival Do not desire to be uch all at once, but patiently add farthing to futhing Perhaps you despise the petty sum? and yet they who want a farthing, and have no friend that will lend them it, thuk faithings very good things Whang, the foolish miller, when he wanted a farthing in his distress, found that no friend would lend because they knew he wanted

[127]

Did you ever read the story of Whang in our books of Chinese learning? he who, despising small sums, and grasping at all, lost even what he had,

Whang, the miller, was naturally avariences; no body loved money better than he, or more respected those that had it When people would talk of a tich man in company, Whang would say, I know him very well, he and I have been long acquainted, he and I are intimate, he stood for a child of mine, but if ever a poor man was mentioned, he had not the least knowledge of the man; he might be very well for aught he knew, but he was not food of many acquaintances, and loved to choose his own compuny

Whoog, however, with all his eagerness for riches, was in reality poor, he had nothing but the profits of his mill to support him , but though these were small, they were certain, while his mill stood and went, he was sure of eating, and his frugality was such, that he every day laid some money by, which he would at intervals count and contemplate with much satisfaction. Yet still his acquisitions were not equal to his desires, he only found himself above want, whereas he desired to be possessed of affluence

One day, as he was indulging these wishes, he was informed that a neighbour of his had found a pan of money under ground, having dreamed of it three mights running before. These tidings were daggers to the heart of poor Whang "Here am 1," says he, "toiling and morling from morning to night for a few paltry farthings, while neighbour Hunks only goes quietly to bed, and dreams himself into thour sands before morning Oh that I could dream like him! with whit pleasure would I dig round the pan , how slily would I carry it home , not even my wife should see me, and then, oh, the pleasure of thrusting one's arm into a heap of gold up to the elbow!"

Such reflections only served to make the miller unhappy, he discontinued his former assiduity, he was quite disgusted with small gains, and his customers began to forsake him Every day he reported the wish, and every night laid himself down in order to dream . Fortune, that was for a long time unkind, at last, however, seemed to smile upon his distresses, and indulged him with the wished-for vision. He dreamed that under a certain part of the foundation of his mill there was concealed a monstrous pan of gold and diamonds. hursed deep in the ground, and covered with a large flat etone He rose up, thanked the stars that were at last pleased to take pity on his sufferings, and concealed his good luck from every person, as is usual in money dreams, in order to have the vision repeated the two succeeding nights, by which he should be certain of its verneity. His wishes in this also were answered, he still dreamed of the same pan of money, in the very same place

Now, therefore, it was past a doubt, so, gotting up early the third morning, he repaus alone, with a mattock in his hand, to the mill, and began to undermine that part of the will which the vision ducated, The first omen of success that he met was a broken mug digging still deeper, he turns up a house tile quite new and entire At last, after much digging. he came to the broad firt stone, but then so large. that it was beyond one man's strength to remove it L 2

"Here," cried he in rapture, to himself, "here it is under this stone there is room for a very large pure of diamonds indeed! I must e'en go home to my wife, and tell hir the whole affair, and get her to assist me in tuning it up." Away therefore he goes, and acquaints his wife with every circumstance of their good fottine. Her reptures on the occasion may easily be imagined, she flew round his neck, and embraced him in an agony of joy, but those transports, however, did not delly their eigerness to know the exact sum returning, therefore, speedily, together to the place where. Whing had been digging, there they found—not indeed the expected tri issue, but the null, their only support, undermined and fallen—Adien.

XXVII.

THE PREFERENCE OF GRACI TO BUILTI.

I STILL rem in at Terky, where I have acceived that money which was remitted here in order to release me from capturity. My fair companion still improves in iny esteem, the more I know her mind, her beauty becomes more programt, she appears chamming, even among the daughters of Gircassan.

Yet, were I to examine her beauty with the art of a statuary, I should find numbers here that far surpass her, nature has not granted her all the borsted Circassian regularity of feature, and yet she greatly exceeds the fanest of the country in the art of seering the affections "Whence," have I often said to-myself, "this resistless magic that attends

XXVII] PREFERENCE OF GRACE TO BEAUTY 147

even moderate charms? Though I regard the beauties of the country with admiration, every interview weakens the impression, but the form of Zelis grows upon my imagination—I never hehold her without an increase of tenderness and respect Whence this injustice of the mind, in preferring imperfect beauty to that which nature seems to have finished with care? Whence the infatuation that he, whom a comet could not amaze, should be astonished at a meteor? When reason was thus intagued to find an answer, my imagination pursued the subject, and this was the result

I fancied myself placed between two landscapes, this called the Region of Beauty, and that the Valley of the Graces the one adorned with all that luxuriant nature could bestow, the fruits of various climates adorned the trees-the grove resounded with music-the gale breathed perfume-every charm that could arise from symmetry and exact distribution were here conspicuous-the whole offering a prospect of pleasure without end The Valley of the Graces, on the other hand, seemed by no means so inviting, the streams and the groves appeared just as they usually do in frequented countries no magnificent parteries, no concert in the grove, the rivulet was edged with weeds, and the rook joined its voice to that of the nightingale All was simplicity and nature

The most striking objects ever first alline the traveller I entered the Region of Beruty with increased currouty, and promised myself endless entisfaction in being introduced to the pre-iding goddess. I perceived several strangers, who entered with the same design, and what surprised me not a httle was, to see several others hastening to leave this abode of seeming felicity.

After some fargue, I had at last the honour of being introduced to the goddess who represented Beauty in person. She was seated on a throne, at the foot of which stood several strangers, lately introduced like me, all regarding her form in extary

"Ah, what eyes! what hps! how clear her complexion! how perfect her shape!" At these exclamations Beauty, with downcast eyes, would endeavour to counterfeit modesty, but soon again looking round as if to confirm every spectator in his favourable sentiments sometimes she would attempt to alline us by smiles, and at intervals would bridle back, in order to inspare us with respect as well as tenderness

This ceremony lasted for some time, and had so much employed our eyes that we had forgot all this while that the goddess was silent. We soon, however, began to perceive the defect. "What," said we, among each other, "are we to have nothing but languishing aus, soft looks, and inclinations of the head? Will the goddess only design to satisfy our eyes?" Upon this, one of the company stepped up to present her with some fruits he had gathered by the way. She received the present most sweetly sinhing, and with one of the whitest hands in the world, but still not a world escaped her lips.

I now found that my companions grew weary of their homage, they went off one by one, and resolving not to be left behind, I offered to go in my turn, when, just at the door of the temple. I was called back by a female whose name was Piide, and XAVII] PREFERENCE OF GRACE TO BEAUTY 149 who seemed displeased at the behaviour of the company. "Where are you hastening?" said she to me with an angry air, "the goddess of Beauty is here "-" I have been to visit hei, madam," replied I, "and find her more beautiful even than report had made her."-" And why then will you leave her?" added the female.-"I have seen her long enough," returned I, "I have got all her features by heart Her eves are still the same. Her nose is a very fine one, but it is still just such a nose now as it was half an hour ago could she throw a little more mind into her face, perhaps I should be for wishing to have more of her company "-" What signifies," replied my female, "whether she has a mind or not? has she any occasion for a mand, so formed as she is hy nature ? If she had a common face, indeed, there might be some reason for thinking to improve it, but when fertures are already perfect, every altera-tion would but impair them A fine face is already at the point of perfection, and a fine lady should endeavour to keep it so the impression it would seceive from thought would but disturb its whole economy " To this speech I gave no reply, but made the best of my way to the Valley of the Glaces. Here I found all those who before had been my companions in the Region of Beauty, now upon the same hrerra As we entered the valley, the prospect meensibly seemed to improve, we found everything so natural, so domestic, and pleasing, that our minds, which before were congealed in admiration, now relaxed into gaiety and good-humour designed to pay our respects to the presiding

XXVIII

ENGLISH SHOPS AND SHOPKEEPFRS.

THE shops of London are as well furnished as those of Pekin Those of London have a picture hung at their door, informing the passengers what they have to sell, as those at Pekin have a board to assure the buyer that they have no intent to cheat him

I was this morning to buy silk for a nightcup Immediately upon entering the mercer's shop, the master and his two men, with wigs plastered with powder, appeared to ask my commands They were certainly the civilest people alive, if I but looked, they flew to the place where I cast my eye, every motion of mine sent them running round the whole shop for my satisfaction I informed them that I wanted what was good, and they showed me not less than forty pieces, and each was the better than the former, the prettiest pattern in nature, and the fittest in the world for nightcaps "My very good friend," said I to the mercer, " you must not pretend to instruct me in silks , I know these in particular to be no better than your mere flimsy bungees "--"That may be," cried the mercer, who, I afterwards found had never contradicted a man in his life "I cannot pretend to say but they may, but I can assure you, my Lidy Trail has had a sack from this mece this very morning "-"But, friend," said I, "though my lady bas chosen a sack from it, I see no necessity that I should wear it for a nightcan" -"That may be," returned he again, "yet what becomes a metty lady, will at any time look well on a handsome gentleman. This short compliment was thrown in so very seasonably upon my ugly face, that even though I dishked the silk, I desired him to cut me off the pattern of a nightcap

While this business was consigned to his jouineyman, the master himself took down some pieces of silk still finer than any I had yet seen, and spreading them before me, "There," cries he, "there's a beauty, my Lord Snakeskin has bespoke the fellow to this for the birthinght this very morning, it would look chaimingly in waistecats"—"But I don't want a waistecat," replied I. "Not want awaistecat i" returned the mercer. "then I would advise you to buy one, when waistecats are wanted, you may depend upon it they will come dear Always buy before you want, and you are sure to be always well used, as they say in Cheapside" These was so much justice in his advice, that I could not refuse taking it; besides, the silk, which was really a good one, increased the temptation, so I gave orders for that to

As I was waiting to have my brigains measured and cut, which, I know not how, they executed but slowly, during the interval the mencer entertained me with the modern manner of some of the nobility receiving company in their morning gowns. "Perhaps, sir," adds he, "you have a mind to see what kind of silk is universally worn." Without waiting for my reply, he spreads a piece before me, which might be teckined beautiful oven in China. "If the nobility," continues he, "were to know I sold this to any under a Right Honomable, I should certainly lose then custom, you see, my lord, it is at once rich, tasty, and quite the thing."—"I am no lord,"

XXVIII | ENGLISH SHOPS AND SHOPKEEPERS 153 interrupted I .- "I beg paidon," cried he, "but be pleased to remember, when you intend buying a morning gown, that you had an ofter from me of something worth money. Conscience, sii, conscience is my way of dealing, you may buy a morning gown now, or you may stay till they become dearer and less fashionable; but it is not my business to advise" In short, most reverend Fum, he persuaded me to buy a morning gown also, and would probably have persuaded me to have bought half the goods in his shop, if I had staved long enough. or was furnished with sufficient money Upon returning bome, I could not help reflecting, with some astonishment, how this very man, with such a confined education and capacity, was yet capable of turning me as he thought proper, and moulding me to his inclinations I knew be was only answering his own purposes, even while he attempted to appear solicitous about mine yet, by a voluntary infatuation, a sort of passion, compounded of vanity and good nature, I walked into the snare with my eyes open, and put myself to future pain in order to give him immediate pleasure The wisdom of the ignorant somewhat resembles the instinct of animals . it is diffused in but a very narrow sphere, but within that circle it acts with vigour, uniformity and success -Adien

XXIX

THE EVIL OF INCREASING PENAL LAWS

I HAVE always regarded the spirit of mercy which appears in the Chinese laws with administon. An order for the execution of a criminal is carried from court by slow journeys of six miles a day, but a paradon is sent down with the most rapid dispatch. If five sons of the same father, be guilty of the same offence, one of them is forgiven, in order to continue the family, and comfort his aged parents in their decline.

Similar to this, there is a spirit of mercy breathes through the laws of England, which some erroneously endeavour to suppress, the laws, however, seem unwilling to punish the offender or to furnish the officers of justice with every means of acting with seventy. Those who arrest debtors are denied the use of aims, the nightly watch is permitted to repress the disorders of the drunken cutterns only with clubs, justice, in such a case, seems to hide her terrors, and permits some of fenders to escape rither than load any with a punishment dispropriationed to the name.

punishment disproporatione to the clime.

Thus it is the glory of an Englishman, that he is not only governed by laws, but that these are also tempored by mercy, a country restaumed by severe haws, and those, too, executed with sevently (as in Japan), is under the most torrible species of tyranny, a royal tyrant is generally dreadful to the great, but numerous penal laws grand every lank of people, and cinefly those least able to icsist oppression—the poor of injustice. When a law enacted to make theft punishable with death happens to be equitably executed, it can at best only guard our possessions; but when, by favour or ignorance, justice pronounces a wrong verdict, it then attacks our lives, since, in such a case, the whole community suffers with the innocent victim if, therefore, in order to secure the effects of one man, I should make a law which should take away the life of another, in such a case, to attain a smaller good, I am guilty of a greater evil, to secure somety in the possession of a bauble, I render a real and valuable possession precarious. And indeed the experience of overy age may serve to vindicate the assertion. No law could be more just than that called lesse majestatis, when Rome was governed by Emperors it was but reasonable, that every conspiracy against the administration should be detected and punished . yet what temable slaughters succeeded in consequence of its enactment, pro scriptions, stranglings, porsonings, in almost every family of distinction, yet all done in a legal wayevery criminal had bis trial and lost his life by a majority of witnesses

And such will ever be the case, where punishments are numerous, and where a weak, victious, but above all, where a macenary magnitude is concorned in their execution such a man devices to see penal laws increased, since he too frequently has it in his power to turn them into instruments of extortion; in such hands, the more laws, the wider means, not of satisfying justice, but of satisfying justices, but of satisfying justices are satisfied in the satisfied satisfying justices are satisfied in the satisfied satisfie

A meacenary magistrate, who is rewarded in proportion, not to his integrity, but to the number he convicts, must be a person of the most unXVIV.] EVIL OF INCREASING PENAL LAWS 157

blemished character, or he will lean on the side of cruelty, and when once the work of injustice is begun, it is impossible to tell how far it will proceed It is said of the hyena, that, naturally, it is no way ravenous, but when once it has tasted human flesh, it becomes the most veracious animal of the forest and continues to persecute mankind over after. A corrupt magistrate may be considered as a human hymna he begins, perhaps, by a private snap, he goes on to a morsel among friends, he proceeds to a meal in public, from a meal he advances to a surfeit, and at last sucks blood like a vampire.

Not into such hands abould the administration of justice be intrusted, but to those who know how to reward as well as to punish It was a fine saying of Nangfu the emperor, who, being told that his enemies had raised an insurjection in one of the distant provinces, "Come, then, my triends," said he, "follow me, and I promise you that we shall quickly destroy them" He marched forward, and the rebels submitted upon his approach All now thought that he would take the most signal icvenge, but were surprised to see the captives treated with mildness and humanity "How!" circ his first minister, "is this the manuer in which you fulfil your promise? your royal word was given that your enemies should be destroyed, and behold you have pardoned all, and even casessed some ! "_" I promised," rephed the emperor with a generous an, "to destroy my enemies, I have fulfilled my word, for see they are enemies no longer, I have made friends of them "

This, could it always succeed, were the time method of destroying the enemies of the state, well it were, if rewards and mercy alone could regulate the commonwealth but since punishments are sometimes necessary, let them at least be rendered terrible, by being executed but seldom, and let Justice lift her sword rather to territy than revenge.
—Adreu.

XLX

THE LADILS' TRAINS RIDICULLD

I HAVE as yet given you but a short and imperfect description of the ladies of England Woman, my friend, is a subject not easily understood, even in China, what, therefore, can be expected from my knowledge of the sex, in a counting where they are universally allowed to be riddles, and I but a stranger?

To confess a truth, I was afraid to begin the description, lest the sex should undergo some new revolution before it was finished, and my picture should thus become old before it could well be said to have ever been new To-day they are lifted upon stilts, to morrow they lower their heels, and ruise their heads their clothes at one time are bloated out with whalebone, at present they have laid their hoops saide, and are become as slim as mermaids. All, all is in a state of continual fluctuation, from the mandalm's wife who rattles through the street in her chariot, to the humble sempstress who clatters over the powement in iron shod patters.

What chiefly distinguishes the sex at present is the train. As a lady's quality or fashion was once determined here by the excumference of her hoop, both are now measured by the length of her tail Women of moderate fortunes are contented with tails moderately long, but ladies of true taste and distinction set no bounds to their ambition in this particular I am told the lady mayoress, on days of ceremony, carries one longer than a bell wether of Bantam, whose tail, you know, is trundled along in a wheelbarrow

Sun of China, what contradictions do we find in this strange world! not only the people of different countries think in opposition to each other, but the inhabitants of a single island are often found inconsistent with themselves Would you believe it? this very people, my Fum, who are so foud of seeing then women with long tails, at the same time dock their hoises to the very rump!

Dut you may easily guess, that I am no ways displeased with a fashion which tends to increase a demand for the commodities of the East, and is so year beneficial to the country in which I was born Nothing can be better calculated to increase the price of silk than the present manner of dressing A lady's train is not bought but at some expense, and after it has swept the public walks for a very few evenings, is fit to be worn no longer more silk must be bought in order to repair the breach, and some ladies of peculiar economy are thus found to patch up then tails eight or ten times in a season This nunecessary consumption may introduce neverty here, but then we shall be the richer for it in China

The Man in Black, who is a professed enemy to this manner of exnamenting the tail, assures me there are numberless inconveniences attending it, and that a lady dressed up to the fashion is as much a cumple as any in Nankin But his chief indignation is levelled at those who dress in this manner, without a proper fortune to support it He assures me, that he has known some who would have a tul though they wanted a petticoat, and others, who, without any other pretensions, fancied they became ladies merely from the addition of three superfluous yards of ragged silk "I know a thrifty good woman," continues he, "who, thinking herself obliged to carry a train like her betters, never walks from home without the uneasy apprehensions of wearing it out too soon: every excursion she makes gives her new anxiety, and her train is every bit as importunate, and wounds her peace as much, as the bladder we sometimes see tied to the tail of a cat."

Nay, he ventures to affirm, that a train may often bring a lady into the most critical oricumstances "for should a rudo fellow," says he, "offer to come up to tavish a liss, and the lady attempt to avoid it, in returns she must necessarily tread upon her tann, and thus fall faully upon her back; by which means, every one knows—her olothes may be spoiled."

The Lides here make no scruple to lough at the smallness of a Chinese shipper, but I fincy our waves in Chine would have a more real cause of laughter, could they but see the immoderate length of an European taam. Head of Confucins I to view a human being exappling herself with a great named by tail for our diversion. Backward she cannot go, forward she must move but slowly, and if ever she attempts to turn round, it must be in a circle not smaller than that described by the wheeling crocodile, when it would face an assailant And yet to think that all this confers importance and majesty ! to think that a lady acquires additional respect from fifteen yards of trailing taffety ! I cannot contain-ha! ha! ba! this is certainly a remnant of European barbarity the female Tartar, dressed in sheep skins, is in far more convenient drapery Then own writers have sometimes inveighed against the absurdaty of this fashion, but perhaps at has never been indiculed so well as upon the Italian theatre, where Pasquarelle, being engaged to attend on the Countess of Fernambioco, having one of his hands employed in carrying her muff, and the other her landog, he bears her train majestically along, by sticking it in the waistband of his breeches -Adien.

XXXI

MISSORTUNES OF PORTS

I saker the chuacter of a poet is in every country the same, fond of enjoying the present, careless of the future, his conversation that of a man of sense, his actions those of a fool, of fortitude able to strind unmoved at the bursting of an earthquake, yet of sensibility to be affected by the breaking of a teacup. Such is his churcter, which, considered in every hight is the very opposite of that which leads to riches

The poets of the West are as remarkable for their mangence as then genius, and yet, among the numerous hospitals designed to reheve the poor, I have heard of but one exected for the benefit of de caved anthors This was founded by Pope Urban VIII, and called THE REFREAT OF THE INCURABLES. intimating, that it was equally impossible to reclum the patients who sned for reception from poverty or from poetry. To be sincere, were I to send you an account of the hves of the Western poets, either uncient or modern, I fancy you would think me employed in collecting materials for a history of human wretchedness Homer is the first poet and boggai of note among the ancients he was blind, and sung his ballads about the streets, but it is observed, that his mouth

was more frequently filled with verses than with bread Plautus, the comic poet, was better offhe had two trades, he was a poet for his diversion, and helped to turn a mill in order to gain a livelihood Terence was a slave, and Boethius died in a grol

Among the Italians, Paulo Borghese, almost as good a poet as Tasso, knew fourteen defferent trades, and yet died because he could get employment in none. Tisso limiself, who had the most annable character of all poets, has often been obliged to borrow a crown from some friend, in order to pay for a month's subsistence he has left us a pictty sonnet, addressed to his cat, in which he begs the light of her eyes to write by, being too poor to afford himself a candle But Bentavogho, poor Bentavoglio! chiefly demands our pity His comedies will last with the Italian language he dissipated a noble fortune in this of charty and benevolence, but, felling into misery in his old age, was refused to be admitted into an hospital which he himself had erected

In Spun, it is said, the great Cervantes died of hunger, and it is certain that the famous Camoens ended his days in an hospital

If we turn to France, we shall there find even stronger instances of the ingratitude of the public Vaugelas, one of the pohest writers and one of the honestest men of his time, was suinamed the Owl, from his being obliged to keep within all day, and venture out only by night, through fear of his creditors. His last will is very remarkable. After having bequeathed all his worldly substance to the discharging his debts, he goes on thus "But as there still may remain some creditors unpaid, even after all that I have shall be disposed of, in such a case it is my last will, that my body should be sold to the surgeons to the best advantage, and that the purchase should go to the discharging those debts which I ove to scorety, so that if I could not, while living, at least when dead I may be useful."

Cassandre was one of the greatest genuses of his time, yet all his merit could not produce him a bare subsistence. Being by degrees driven into a hatred of all mankind, from the little pity he found amongst them, he even ventured at last ungratefully to impute his calamities to Providence. In his last agonies, when the priest entreated him to rely on the justice of Heaven, and ask meior from him that made him,—"If God," replus he, "has shown me no justice here what reason have I to expect any from him here effect?" But being answered, that a suspension of justice was no argument that should induce us to doubt of its reality—"Let me entreat you," contained his confessor, "by all that is dear, to be reconciled to God, your father, your maker. and friend "-" No," replied the exasperated wietch, "you know the manner in which he left me to live; and," pointing to the straw on which he was stretched, "you see the manner in which he leaves me to die!"

But the sufferings of the poet in other countries is nothing when compared to his distresses here the names of Spenser and Otway, Butler and Dijden, are every day mentioned as a national reproach some of them hved in a state of precarious indigence and others laterally died of hunger

At present the few poets of England no longer depend on the great for subsistence, they have non no other pations but the public, and the public, collectively considered, is a good and a generous master It is, indeed, too frequently mistaken as to the merits of every candidate for favour, but to make amends, it is never mistrken long. A performance indeed, may be forced for a time into reputation, but, destitute of real ment, it soon sinks, time, the touchstone of what is truly valuable, will soon discover the fraud, and an author should never arrogate to himself any share of success, till his works have been read at least ten years with satisfaction A man of letters at present, whose works no valuable, is perfectly sensible of their value Every polite member of the community, by buying what he writes, contributes to reward him The ridicule, therefore, of living in a guiret might have been wit in the last age, but continues such no longer, because no longer true A writer of real

ment now may easily be urh, if his heart be set only on fortune, and for those who have no ment, it is but fit that such should remain in mented obscurity He may now refuse an invitation to dinner, without fearing to meur his pitron's displeasure, or to starre by remaining at home. He may now venture to appear in company with just such clothes as other men generally wear, and talk even to princes with all the conscious superiority of wisdom Though he cannot boast of fortune here, yet he can bravely assert the dignity of independence - Adiou

XXXII

THE MANNER IN WHICH SOME PHILOSOPHERS MAKE ARRIFICIAL MISLRY

THE mind is ever ingenious in making its own distress. The wandering beggar, who has none to protect, or feed, or to shelter him, fancies complete happiness in labour and a full meal, take him from rags and want, feed, clothe, and employ him, his wishes now use one step above his station, he could be happy were he possessed of nament, food, and ease Suppose his wishes gratified even in these, his prospects widen as he ascends he finds himself in affluence and tranquillity, indeed, but indolence soon breeds anxiety, and he desires not only to be freed from pun, but to be possessed of pleasure. pleasure is granted him, and this but opens his soul to ambition , and ambition will be sure to taint his future happiness, either with jerlousy, disappointment, or fatigue

But of all the arts of distress found out by man for his own toment, perhaps that of philosophic misery is most fully indiculous, a passion nowhere carried to so extravagant an excess as in the country where I now reside. It is not enough to engage all the compression of a philosophic here, that his own bartly, he shall grieve for the inhabitants of the moon, if the situation of her imaginary monitains happens to alter, and dread the extinction of the sun, if the spots happen to increase. One should imagine, that philosophy was introduced to make men happy, but here it serves to make himilieds mean happy, but here it serves to make himilieds meantly.

My landlady, some days ago, brought me the dary of a philosopher of this desponding sort who had lodged in the apartment before me — It contains the history of a life which seems to be one continued tissue of sorrow, approbasion, and distress A single week will serve as a specimen of the whole—single week will serve as a specimen of the whols—"MODAY—In what a trustent decaying situation are we placed, and what trustent decaying situation are we placed, and what trustons tensors does philosophy furnish to make mankind unbappy! A single giain of mustrid shall continue to produce its similitude through numberless successions, yet what his been granted to this hitle seed, has been demed to our planetary system the mustrid seed its still unaftered, but the system is growing old, and must quickly full to decay. How terrible will it he, when the motions of the planets have at last become so inregular as to need repuining, when the moon shall full into frightful parelysms of alter than, when the earth, deviating from its ancient track, and with every other planets frogetting its a circular revolutions, shall become so eccentric, that unconfined by the laws of system, it shall fly off into boundless space, to knock against some distant world, or fall in upon the sun, either extinguishing his light, or burned up by his flames in a moment! Perhaps, while I write, this dicadful change has begun Shield me from universal rum! Yet idiot man laughs, sings, and rejoices, in the very face of the sun, and seems no way touched with his situation

"TUFSDAY -Went to bed in great distress, iwiked and was comforted by considering that this change was to happen at some indefinite time . and therefore, like death, the thoughts of it might easily be borne But there is a revolution a fixed determined revolution, which must certainly come to pass, yet which, hy good fortune, I shall never feel, except in my posterity The obliquity of the equator with the coliptic is now twenty minutes less than when it was observed two thousand years ago by Piteas If this be the case, in six thousand the obliquity will be still less by a whole degree This being sup posed, it is evident that our earth, as Louville has clearly proved, has a motion, by which the climates must necessarily change place, and in the space of one million of years England shall actually travel to the Antarctic pole I shudder at the change? How shall our unhappy grandchildren endure the Indeous chinate! A million of years will soon be accomplished, they are but a moment when compared to eternity , then shall our charming country, as I may ear, in a moment of time, resemble the hideous wilderness of Nov 2 Zembla

" WEDNESDAY -To-night, by my calculation, the long predicted comet is to make its first appearance

Heavens I what tenors are impending ever our little dim speck of earth? Dreadful visitation! Are we to be scorched in its fires, or only smothered in the vapour of its tail? That is the question! Thoughtless mortals, go build houses, plant orchards, purchase estates, for to-morrow you die But what if the comet should not come? That would be equally fatal Comets are servants which periodically return to supply the sun with fuel If our sun, therefore, should be disappointed of the expected supply, and all his fuel be in the meantime buint out, he must expire like an exhausted taper. What a miserable situation must our earth be in without his enlivening rays! Have we not seen several neighbouring suns disappear? Has not a fixed star, near the tail of the Ram, lately been quite extinguished? "Thursday -The comet has not yet appeared,

ILZZZ

I am sorry for it first, sorry because my calculation is false, eccoundly, soiry lest the sun should want fuel, thirdly, sorry lest the wits should laugh at our exoneous predictions, and, fourthly, sorry because, if it appears to-night, it must necessarily come within the sphere of the earth's attraction, and Heaven help the unhappy country on which it happens to fall ! "FRIDAY -Our whole somety have been out, all eager in search of the comet We have seen not less than sixteen comets in different mats of the fix upon one only to be the comet expected That near Virgo wants nothing but a tail to fit it out completely for terrestrial admiration "SATURDAY -The moon as, I find, at her old heavens However, we are unanimously resolved to pranks Her appulses, librations, and other irregularities, indeed amaze me My daughter, too, is this morning gone off with a grenadier No way surprising; I was never able to give her a relish for wisdom. She ever promised to be a mere expletive in the creation. But the moon, the moon gives me real uneasmess . I fondly fancied I had fixed her I had thought her constant, and constant only to me . but every night discovers her infidelity, and proves me a desolate and abandoned lover "-Adicu

RIXXX

THE PROPER MUST BE CONTENTED TO BE JUDGED BY THOSE WHOM THEY HAVE APPOINTED TO GOVERN A STORY TO THIS EFFECT.

IN every society some men are born to teach, and others to receive instruction , some to work, and others to enjoy in idleness the fruits of them industry, some to govern, and others to obey. Livery people, how free soever, must be contented to give up part of their liberty and judgment to those who govern, in exchange for their hopes of security, and the motives which first influenced their choice in the election of their governors should ever be weighed against the succeeding apparent inconsistencies of their conduct All cannot be rulers, and men are generally best governed by a few. In making way through the rata scames of business, the smallest obstacles are apt to retaid the execution of what is to be planned by a multiplicity of counsels, the udgment of one alone being always fittest for wind170

ing through the labyinths of intigue, and the obstructions of disappointment A screent which, as the fable observes, is furnished with one head and many tails, is much more capable of subsistence and expedition than another which is furnished with but one tail and many heads

Obvious as these truths are, the people of this country seem insensible of their force. Not satisfied with the advantages of internal peace and opulence, they still minmen at then governors, and interfere in the execution of their designs, as if they wanted to be something more than happy. But as the Europeans instruct by argument, and the Aciatics mostly by narration, were I to address them, I should convey my sentiments in the following story — "Takupi had long been prime minister of Tipai-tala, a fertile country that stretches along the western confines of China During lins administration whatever advantages could be derived from uts, learning and commerce, were seen to bless the people, nor were the necessary precautions of providing for the scennty of the state forgotten It often happens, however, that when men are possessed of all they want, they begin to find toiment from imaginary afflictions, and lessen then present enjoyments, by foreboding that those en joyments are to have an end The people now, therefore, endeavoured to find out girevances, and, after some search, actually began to think themselves aggreeved A petition against the enormities of Takupi was carried to the throne in due form, and the Queen who governed the country, willing to satisfy her subjects, appointed a day in which his accusers should be heard, and the minister should stand upon his defence.

"The day being arrived, and the minister brought before the tribunal, a carrier, who supplied the city with fish, appeared among the number of his accusers He exclaimed, that it was the custom, time immemorial, for carriers to bring their fish upon a house in a hamper; which, being placed on one side, and balanced by a stone on the other, was thus conveyed with ease and safety, but that the pusoner, moved either by a spirit of innovation, or perhaps bribed by the hamper makers, had obliged all carriers to use the stone no longer, but balance one hamper with another, an older entirely repugnant to the customs of all antiquity, and those of the kingdom of Tipartala in particular.

"The carrier finished, and the whole court shook their heads at the mnovating minister, when a second witness appeared. He was inspector of the city buildings, and accused the disgraced favourite of having given orders for the demolition of an ancient ruin, which obstructed the passage through one of the principal streets He observed, that such buildings were noble monuments of barbarous antiquity, contributed finely to show how little their ancestors understood of architecture, and for that reason such monuments should be held sacred, and suffered gradually to decay

"The last witness now appeared This was a widow, who had laudably attempted to burn herself upon her husband's funeral pile But the mnovating minister had prevented the execution of her design, and was insensible to her tears, protestations, and entreaties

mxxx

172

faxour"

"The Queen could have pardoned the two former offences, but this last was considered as so gross an many to her sex, and so directly contrary to all the customs of antiquity, that it called for immediate 'What' creed the Queen, 'not suffer a woman to burn herself when she thinks proper? The sex are to be prettily tutored, no doubt, if they must be restrained from entertaining their female friends now and then with a fried wife, or roasted acquamtance I sentence the criminal to be banished my presence for ever, for his injurious treatment of the ser! "Takupi had been hither to silent, and spoke only to show the sincerity of his resignation 'Great Quoen,' cried he, 'I acknowledge my crimo, and since I am to be banished, I beg it may be to some rumed town, or desolate village, in the country I have governed I shall find some pleasure in im-proving the soil, and bringing back a spirit of industry among the inhabitants. His request appearing reasonable, it was immediately complied with , and a courtier had enders to fix upon a place of banishment answering the minister's description After some months' scarch, however, the manny proved fruitless, neither a desolate village nor a rumed town was found in the whole kingdom 'Alas,' said Takupi then to the Queen, 'how can that country be ill-governed which has neither a desolate village nor a numed town in it?' The Queen perceived the justice of his expostulation, and the minister was received into more than former

XXXXIV.

THE UTILES Y AND ENTERTAINUPSET THAT MIGHT RESULT

I may frequently been amazed at the ignorance of almost all the European travellers who have penetiated any considerable way ensisted into Agri. They have been influenced either by motives of commence or pietry, and then accounts are such as might resonably be expected from men of resynarrow or very prejudiced education—the dictates of superattion or the result of ignorance. In it not surprising, that in such a variety of adventures not one single philosopher should be found? for, as to the travels of Gemelli, the learned are long agreed that the whole is but an unposture.

There is scarcely any country, how rude or uncultivated seever, where the inhabitants are not progressed of some perminer secrets, either in nature or art, which might be transplanted with success In Siberian Tartery, for instance, the natives outract a strong spirit from milk, which is a secret probably unknown to the chemists of Lurope the most savage part of India they are possessed of the secret of dyeing vegetable substances scarlet. and of refining level into a metal which, for hardness and colour, is little interior to silver not one of which scriets but would, in Europe, make a man's fortune The power of the Assatzes in moducing wands, or banging down tam, the Europeans are upt to treat as fabulous, because they have no instances of the like nature mong themselves, but they would have treated the searces of gunpowder and the munner's compass in the same manner, had they been told the Chinese used such aits before the invention was common with themselves at home

Of all the English philosophers I most revolence Bacon, that grott and hardy genus. He it is who allows of secrets yet unknown, who, undanted by the seeming difficulties that oppose, prompts human curiosity to examine every part of nature, and even whots man to try whether he cannot subject the tempost, the thunder, and even enthquakes, to human control! Oh, did a man of his daring spirit, of his genus, penetration, and learning, travel to those countries which have been visited only by the superstitions and the mercenery, what might not mankind expect! How would he enlighten the regions to which he travelled! and what a variety of knowledge and useful improvement would he not bring brok in exchange

There is, probably, no country so barbarous, that would not disclose all it knew, if it received from the traveller equivilent information and I am apt to think, that a person who was ready to give more knowledge than he received would be welcome wherever he cume. All his one in travelling should only be to suit his intellectual banquet to the people with whom he conversed, he should not attempt to teach the unlettered Taitur astronomy, nor yet instruct the polite Olimese in the rader attempt to teach the unlettered Taitur astronomy, nor yet instruct the polite Olimese in the rader atts of subsistence. He should endeavour to improve the barbarian in the secrets of hving comfort bly, and the inhabition of a more refined country in the speculative pleasures of suches. How much more nobly would a philosopher thus employed spend his time, than by sitting at home, earnestly intent upon adding one star more to his catalogue, or one monster more to his collection, or still, if possible, more triflingly sedulous in the meatenation of fleas, or the sculpture of a cherry-stone!

I never consider this subject without being surpused, that none of those societies so laudably established in England for the promotion of arts and learning have ever thought of sending one of their members into the most eastern parts of Asia, to make what discoveries he was able. To be convinced of the utility of such an undertaking, let them but read the relations of their own travellers It will there be found, that they are as often deceived themselves, as they attempt to deceive others The merchant tells us, perhaps, the price of different commodities, the methods of baling them up, and the properest manner for a European to preserve his health in the country. The missionary, on the other hand, informs us, with what pleasure the country to which he was sent embraced Christianity, and the numbers he converted, what methods he took to keep Lent in a region where there was no fish, or the shifts he made to celebrate the rites of his religion in places where there was neither bread not wine! Such accounts, with the usual appendage of marriages and funerals, inscriptions, rivers, and mountains, make up the whole of a European traveller's duary but as to all the secrets of which the inhabitants are possessed, those are universally attributed to magic, and when the traveller can give no other account of the wonders he sees performed, very contentedly ascribes them to the power of the devil chemist, "That if every aitist would but discover what new observations occurred to him in the exercise of his trade, philosophy would thence gain innumerable improvements" It may be observed, with stall greater justice, that if the useful knowledge of every country, however barburous, was gleaned by a judicious observer, the advantages would be mestamable Are there not even in Emone many useful inventions known or practised but in one place? The instrument, as an example, for cutting down coin in Germany is much more handy and expeditious, in my opinion, than the sickle used in England. The cheap and expeditious manner of making vinegal, without previous fermentition, 16 known only in a part of France If such discoveries, countries yet unexplored, or only passed through by ignorant travellers in hasty en avans? The caution with which foreigners are received in Asia may be alleged as an objection to such a design But how readily have several European merchants found admission into regions the most suspecting, under the character of Sanjapins, or northern pilgrims To such not even China itself denies access therefore, remain still to be known at home, what funds of knowledge might not be collected in

To send out a traveller properly qualified for these purposes might be an object of instional concern, it would in some measure reprir the breaches made by ambition, and might show that there were still some who boasted a greater name than that of patacots, who professed themselves lovers of men The only difficulty would remain m choosing a proper person for to authors an enterprise. He should be a man of philosophical tuns, one apt to deduce consequences of general stility from particular occurrences, norther swelled with pride, nor hardened by preguidec, norther wooded to one particular system no instanted only in one particular science; neither wholly a betame, nor quite an autoquatum, his mind should be tructured with mischnesons knowledge, and insurance himanined by an intercourse with men. He should be in some measure an enthusiast in the design, fond of ti vivelling, from a riapid unagunation and an innate leve of change, furnished with a bank not growledge, such as such many every fatigue, and a beauto not easily torrified ab diages—Admin

VXXX.

A CONTESTED ELECTION

The langual are at present employed in colebrating a feast, which becomes general every seventh year, the pulmanent of the rution being then dissolved, and unother upported to be chosen. This solemnty fills infinitely short of om Rests of the Lanterns in magnificane and ephondour, it is also surprised by others of the First in unanimity and pure devotion; but no festival in the world can compare with it for exting. Their exting, indeed, amazes me, had I five hundred heads, and write each head furnished with brains, yet would they all be mentioned to compute the transfer of two pages, genera, and turkers, which, upon this occasion, the for the good of their combiny

To say the truth, eating seems to make a grand ingredient in all English parties of real, business, or annusement. When a church is to be built, or an hospital endowed, the directors assemble, and instead of consulting upon it, they ext upon it, by which means the business goes forward with success When the poor me to be releved, the others appointed to dole out public charity assemble and ext upon it. Not less it ever been known that they filled the belies of the poor, till they had previously satisfied their own But in the election of magis trates the prople seem to exceed all bounds the moute of a candidate are often measured by the number of his treats, his constituents assemble, cat upon him, and lend then applaise, not to his integrity or souse, but to the quantities of his beef and brandy. And yet I could for give tiny people their pleutiful merk on this occasion, as it is extremely natural for every man to cut a great deal when he gets it for nothing, but what amakes me is, that all this good hving no way contributes to improve their good humour. On the contrary, they seem to love then temper as they lose their appetites, every morsel they swallow, and every glass they pour down, serves to mercase their animosity Many an honest man, before us harmless as a tame rabbit, when lorded with a single election dinner, his become more dangerous than a charged culterin Upon one of these occasions I have returily seen a bloody minded man-milliner sally forth at the head of a mob, determined to face a despirate pistigeook, who was general of the opposite party. But you must not suppose they are without a pretext for thus beating each other. On the con-

traty, no man here is so uncovilized as to beat his neighbour without producing very sufficient reasons. One candidate, for instance, treats with gin, a spirit of their own manufacture, another always drinks brandy, imported from ahread. Brandy is a whole-some liquor, gin, a liquor wholly their own. This, then, furnishes an obvious cause of quarrel,—Whether it be most reasonable to get diunk with gin, or get drunk with brandy? The mob meet upon the debate, fight themselves sober, and then draw off to get drunk are and change for anothen encounter. So that the English may now propelly be said to be engaged in war: since, while they are subduing their enamies abroad, they are breaking each other's leads at home.

I lately made an occursion to a neighbouring village, in order to be a spectator of the ceremonies practised upon this occasion. I loft town in company with three fiddlers, nine dozen of hams, and a corporation peet, which were designed as reinforcements to the gui-drinking party. We entered the town with a very good face, the fiddlers, no way intimidated by the enemy, kept handling their arms up the prancipal threet. By this pradent manneuvre, they took peaceable possession of their head-quarters, amidst the shouts of multitudes, who seemed perfectly rejoiced at hearing their maine, but above all at seeing their hacon. I must own, I could not need to pleased to see all ranks of people, on this occasion, levelled into an equality, and the poor, in some measure, enjoying the numbere privileges of nature. If there was any distinction shows, the lowest of the people seemed to receive it from the rich. I could perceive a cobbler with a levee at his door and a biberdasher giving audience from behind his counter

But my reflections were soon interrupted by a mob, who demanded whether I was for the diskillery or the brewery I as these were terms with which I has totally unacquainted, I chose at first to be silent; however, I know not what might not have been the consequence of my reserve, bad not the mobbeen called off to a skiranth between a brundydinker's covered a gandinker's martiff, which touned out, greatly to the satisfaction of the mob, in favour of the mastiff

This spectacle, which afforded high entertainment, was at hist ended by the appearance of one of the candidates, who came to harangue the mob he made a very pathetic speech upon the late exceeds apportation of foreign diams, and the downful of the distillery, I could see some of the undennes the time of the manner of the manner of the manner of the speech and his procession by Mrs. Deputy and Mrs. Mayoress. Mrs. Deputy was not in the least in liquor, and as for Mrs. Mayoress, one of the spectators as uned me in my ear, that—she was a very fine woman before she had the smallpox.

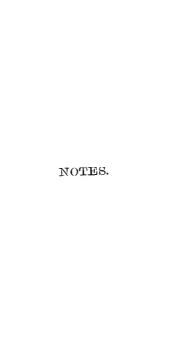

Mixing with the crowd, I was now conducted to Mixing with the crowd, I was now conducted to the hall where the magnetiates are above hear what tongue can describe this rene of confusion i the whole crowd seemed equally inspired with anger, jedines, politics, pathodism, and puned. I remarked one figure that was carried up by two minupon this occasion. I at first begin to pity his infimitive as natural, but soon found the fellow so drunk that he could not stand, another made his appearance to give his vote, but though he could stand, he actually lost the use of his tongue, and remained silent, a third, who, excessively drunk, could both stand and speak, being asked the candidate's name for whom he voted, could be prevailed upon to make no other answer but "Tobacco and brandy" In short, an election hall seems to be a theatre, where every passion is seen without disguise : a school where fools may readily become worse, and where philosophers may gather wisdom - Adien.

ESSAY L

P. 1. Such complaints as this essay commences with have been common in all ages. Herace lamented that

"Virtutem incolumem odimus, Sublitam ex ocubs querimus invidi."

We hate virtue while alive; we esteem and regret it when it is taken from us P 8. The Temple of Frme forms the subject of a west pleasing adaptation from Chancer by Pope, and, as he tells us in his prefatory advertisement that "the Poem is introduced in the manner of the Provencil poets, whose works were for the most part visions or passes of imagination, and constantly descriptive," it may be thought that Goldsmith borrowed from it line

idea of calling this essay a icyclic

Addrson was the author of a very considerable portion of the 'Spectator,' and of those numbers which me usually considered the most executent It would be superfluous here to speak more at length of him, or of Suift, Pope, Steele, or Congieve But, as Pope has often been reproached, and by some recent writers with great bitterness, for his attack on Addison in the epistle to Dr Arbuthnot, it may not be out of place to point out that in the some imitations of Horace, now commonly known as the Satnes and I pistles, to which the spistle to Arbuthnot serves as the prologue, he speaks of Addison with the highest pris -

"And in our own [days] (excuse some courtly strains) No whiter page thru Iddison's remains '-il 1 216

Nor should we omit to mention that Swift, to whom the 'Duncard' is ascribed, as the object of Pope's constant praise, for wit, yer itality, and pitriotic independence

"O than 'whatever title plans there ea, I m. Brigger, Paler tall, or Gullier ,

Whether thou choose fers into s' serion ar, Or lough and shalle in Rab has con chan

Or pries the Carte, manufy wandings, Or thy grant'd country's copy or al one unland "

Du serel, 1 19

And again -

186

"Let Ireland tell how wit upheld her cause. Her trude supported, and supplied her laws, And leave on Swift this grateful verse engrav'd, 'The Right's a Court attach'd, a portrut sav'd '"

Satures and Epistles, II 1 224 P 3 Colley Gibber, who died in 1757, was the Post Laurente, and it was perhaps oning to Pope's realousy of him by reason of his holding this appointment, for which Pope was disqualified by his religion (being a Roman Catholic), that the poet placed him on the throne of the Dunces --"High on a gorgeous seat that far outshone Henley's gilt tub, or Flerkno's Irish throne , Or that where on her Curlls the public pours All bounteous, fragrant grams, and golden showers,

Gie it Cibber sate

But the sneer or sature was wholly undeserved, (for Cibber, though not distinguished as a poet, was the nuthor of the 'Careless Husband,' and of more than one other comedy of far more than average ment,) and containly deserved the "black eyo" which the conchinan here represents Cubber as having given the saturat

Thus "wh.ms.cal figure" with his proket of the 'In spector' is meant for Sir John Hill, a physician, who wrote on a great variety of subjects, and, according to an emgram on him by Garnek.

"For physic and farces his equal there scarce is, His farces are physic, his physic a farre is "

He must have tried his hand at the drama, though the great actor and manager's description of them may explain or excuse our ignorance of even the titles of his dramas. The description of him as "carrying a mosegay" is in allusion to an escay which he had published "on the method of raising double flowers from single ones "

Ib The producer of "some farces, a tragedy," &. , is Mr Arthur Murphy, a very passedlaneous writer His one tragedy was the 'Ouphan of China' But he also wrote several comedies, some of which, such as 'All in the Wiong,' and 'The Way to Keep Him' certainly deserve a higher title than that of "fuces," though his best works of that kind were written after the publication of this erray, for, though he was it that time upwards of thirty years of age, he had till the commencement of the present century Among others of his miscellaneous norks he published a translation of Tacitus, which has considerable ment.

P 4 The gentleman currying the 'Dictionary' and the 'Runblet' 18, of course, Dr Johnson, with whom the author (as has been mentioned in the Introduction) was soon to form a very intimate friendship,

P 5 The bearer of the essays, "thapsodies against the religion of lus country," but also of a 'history,' is Hume, the excellence of whose history presents a singular contrast to the mischievous though feeble sophistries of his scentical metaphysics He had just published his third volume, which in his autobiography he mentions as having been received with very hostile clamour, his description of "the reign of Elizabeth being particularly obnozious"; but, though the preceding volumes had at first been equally ill-received, by this time their mout had come to be acknowledged as that of the entire work has long been

Ib The hearer of the "volummous lustory" and of the "romance" is Smellett, whose 'History of England from the Revolution' was a work to which his talents were evidently unsuited, but whose novels, 'Peregrine Pickle,' 'Humphrey Clinker' (not, however, published till 1771), and others, were long maked among the masterpieces of English action, and would still be so, were they not disfigured with a consenses and undelicary of which the present age is, happily, less tolerant than its predecessors

Essay II

The Borges here mentioned as the son of Pone Alexander VI is Crear Borgia, Due de Valentinois, a man whose character Brantume rather currently describes by saying he dul some good and some harm (du bun et du mat), the harm beginning with the munder of his chier brother, to the great annoy then (facherie) of his fither, and to whom Pope, with greater truth, allules as the top personiheation and embodiment of all wickerlarss

"If plagues and earthqual as theak not Heaven's design, Why then a Borga, or a Catchne?"

Ecay on Man, 1 156.

The Or un family "Amone, perhaps above, the peer and princes of the city, I distinguish the irral houses of Colonia and Orsin, whose private story is an essential part of the aunils of modern Rome" (Gibbon, class) And he proceeds to relate that the two hours were "constant and equal antagonists in the long hereditars feud which districted above 250 years the erch spatical state " Two Popes-Celestin III and Nacholas III -were of the Orsini family, who consequently, in the long quarrel between "the party of the suspin and the cause of the Church," esponsed the cause of the Guells, and hore "the key; on their braner

If the character of tim "take Dake Meriborough" ever wore "set up those that of his more talked of prodecesson," the outher must have expected pertent to become bland indeed In the year 1758 he was sure to, Mr. Pitt is Communderan Chief of the expedition against $1 Valo, which he found to strongly fortised for him to venture to attack, though he had not fewer than 29,000 men under his command. Lord Stan long-describes hune is "a maje log and all question love, Soolpout, and generous, but of no shuming taleats in the field or class where "(Hestory of Langland, clup 2 ANV).)

P 7 Continuous was the great Chimese philosopher and law giver, who is said to have lived in the sixth century he fore the commencement of the Christian era

Essar III

The expression of Tacitus, to which reference is here made, is to be found in cleap even of the 3rd book of the 'Anuals, m which the historian is describing the condition of the Finners under the cuber superors "Contuptission to publica plurime legis" (laus an most numerous in the most country states, a centence in which it is worth remarking that Theithe preserves the name of "republic," though his discoutent is chiefly ascited by the fact that the republic had long heen trampled under foot Montesquien was a President of the I to us h I' irlument in the latter half of the reign of Loins XV who a rote an elaborate treatise on The Spirit of Laws ('L'I' prit de Lois'), of whom and of which Lord Macrilly eife -" Monte-gitich emojs, perleipe, a nider celebitty thin any political writer of modern Langue Something he doubtless owes to his morat but much more to his fortune 110 had the good luck of a Valentine He caught the eyo of the Prench nation at the moment when it was a along from the long sleep of political and whysons breatry, and in consequence he because a fiscounte. The Paulish, at that tune, considered a From lower who talked about constitutional checks and fund) mouth laws as a product not le a netourshang then the learned jug or the musical infant Specious but shillow, studious of effect, undeferent to truth, over to build up a system, but curles of collecting the material, out of a hich alone a sound and durable syet in can be built, the high I'm solut constructed theorem are regular and shightly as eard larger, no concr proje ted their completed, he room r to oploted their ldown away, no somer blor n as a, than forgotten" ("Critical and Historial J ns. 1 1001

In the quotetion from Sallast Goldenith teems to regard not tention by onething different from In that "Little Burtles until the two results is too well-due to, their combined authority Mostell x to take and under the following the Oll IV 5-22

Essar IV

The phrise of "the Augustan age," used in reference to any modern nation, is evidently meant to express that age in which the most admirable writers of that nation flourshed .- writers as far superior to their predecessors of their successors as the Latin writers of the eighth century of Rome were speaking, neither Cicero, Taestus, nor Plusy belong to the Augustan age, Ciccro being put to death several years before Augustus made himself supreme, and neither Tacitus nor Pliny being hoin when he died But, in the first place, such a phrase may be objected to, as assuming that there is generally such an age in the literature of every people-a doctrine which may well he doubted In the other classic country, Greece, there was no such age There was, indeed, a period during which all the great writers and orators of Athens flourished, but not only did that period extend over one hundred and fifty years, from the time of Æschylus to that of Demosthenes, but the very greatest of the Greek poets, who wore not diminatic, flourshed continues before the commencement of that era , and one, unrivalled to this day in his own line of pistoral or busohe Poetry (Theocratus), a comple of generations later Again, if We examine the literary history of that modern nation which, next to our own, has produced the most excellent writers Italy, we shall find that Dante, Becraccio, and Petrarch, are divided by many gonerations from Magnayella, Amosto, Tasso, and Guicciardini Indeed if such a phrise could be applied to a dead language, at might still be furly contended that it was imapplicable to a living one But there is a still greater objection to our author's stamping the age of Queen Anne with such lugh pruse, even though he somewhat extends it by the rather ague addition of "some year before that period," an expression upp nently intended to include the later works of Dr.don-(those published after the death of Charles II ,) and though, at the other end, it is commonly extended to the death of Pope in the middle of the teign of George II For, if we compare it with the 190 of Eherbeth, we find in the latter Spensor, Shikspere, Breen, Houlet, Raleigh, Ben Jonson, Masunger, Beaumont and Ficticher, and Milton as to his entire works And it me compare it with the age of the Restoration we find in that Milton in his maturer genera and grander works Couley, Willer, Butler, Othay, Dryden (at all events the myority of his worls), Chrendon, Burnet twhose great history of the Reformation n s published in 1674), Locke, Shaftesbury, and Halitax, with the got t divines Richop Tivler and Dr Isiae Birrot Non in each of these periods we find outhors of the sers brighte t genine with when search one writer of Queen Anne , there can be compared for a moment. And thus, indeed, scens to be admitted by our author himself in this very (381), since, while extalling the muon of "strength and grace," of "faste and genus," which he finds in the writers of Anne's time, he con fesses, that "no one water attracts our attention singly", but the honour which he claims for them is due to their association, "hike stars lost in each other's brightness, they have cast a lustre upon the age in which they lived "

We must contend that such as not the true test by which such a question should be decided, but that what the critic should regard is the power and brilliancy of the brightest not the amount of light existing in the mise, and that, viewed thus, Shakspere or Milton outshines the whole company, of which Pope is the chief, just as, to fellow out our author's simile, Venus or Jupiter in mid heaven is a more conspicuous and attractive object than the whole milky way

And we must contend further that, evenif it were granted that the multiplicity of authors of ment is the consideration to be pumarily taken into account, the age of which our author himself was so great an ornament-the age of George III -by far surpassed that of Anne, may, that it may be doubted whether, if the pre eminent excellence of some of its writers in almost every class of composition be fourly estimated, any previous period of our literature is to be preferred to it. In portry it can beast of Burns, the most feeling and sweetest of readern lyusts, of Wordsworth, Byron, and Shelley, in the drama, of Sheridan, in lustory, of Hume, Gibbon, and Souther, in political philosophy, of Burke, while in poctry and prose fiction combined it can point to the greatest name in all modein Interviture since the time of Shakspene—the incomparable Scott

P 19 Str Roger L'Estrange's writings were almost confined to political pamphlets. His "more liberal compositions" to which the text dludes, were chiefly translations of classical norks, such as Cicero's 'Offices' and Esop's fables Spence, in his ancedotes, mentions that Pope rated his style very highly and on our occasion placed have on a letel with Ben Jonson and

Congreve for east and elegance in familiar dialogue

Ib Dryden It is superfinant to dwell on Dryden's poetry , and when our author says that "had it not been for him we never should have known a Pope," he is only repesting what is family confessed by Pope houself, but in what he says of the case and elegenee of his press he anticipates the praise which lonson gave him some years later in his 'Lives of the

P 20 Otvay was a tragge writer of the reign of Charles II , whose most celebrated plays are 'Venue Preserved' and 'The Ouphun' In his 'Essiy on the Drama' Walter Scott fully endorses the culogy here bestowed on him, adding that in pathos he is superior to Shakspere himself. But the great Genman errich A W Schlegel, while seininting ins misstery of the pathetic, changes him with great "ignorance of the true rules of composition," supporting his censure by the statement that "he live taken half of the scenes of his Caius Maine," vollally, or with designing changes, from the "Romeo and Julitt" of Shrikspete"

P 20 Let was a contemporary of Otway, whom he survived seven years, dying in 1692 Diyden commended "the vigour of his youthful muse," but his works have fallen into oblivion the Rows was Poet Luneate in the reign of Anne and the Ih Mone was Poet Luneate in the leight of Anne and the first years of George I Among other plays he wrote 'Jane Shore' and 'The Far Penticut' (the name of a principal character in which, Lothano, has become proverbad as a synonym for a take). From one of Walpele's letters (Nov 12, 1740) we learn that he had the singular compliment pand hum of having his 'Tamerlane' atways acted on King William's birthday. But Johnson regards his translation of Lucania' (Pharalin' as his best talle to fame, affirming that there is pethals no trunslation that so completely exhibits the genus and spirit of the outgoin?

P 21 Sir Richard Fornheim was a diplomatist of such reputation that he was employed in the negotiation of the marriage of Challes II with the Infonts of Portugal. Cathanine of Braganza, and was employed in more than one other subsequent mission of importance

Ib Lora Artangen was one of the Cabel Munster, he is the minister of whom Scott makes the Duke of Buckingiam say that had he held lise count as King of the Isle of Mun he would have taught Jerningham (his valet) "in half a day to look as who, walk as softly, and speak as stillly as Hvary Bennet" ("Ferent of the Fe Li, 'e 25) But Maccalay in half says on Sir W. Temple, speaks of him as one whose "mirth made his presente always welcome in the toyal closet," supposing his description by a quotation from Chicardon, who tecords that "his pleasant and agreedade humour made him accoptable to the Ling", 'nd from Evelyn, who had "conversed much with hun, and prenounced him to be a man of singularly polished municies, and of gent colloquial powers".

Ib Sir W Teingle was the Enish Musator at the Hague in the early put of the teign of Charles II, and gained a high reputation as the projector and chief negotiator of the Triple Alhance, concluded in 1668 between Great Britain, Holland, and Sweden, by which Louw XIV was composed to agree to a perce. In Johnson gives him the credit of having been the "first write who gair, cadence to English more."

Ib I ocks, who was born in 1632, and ched in 1704, is that known in the present day is the author of the "Besays on the Ifuman Understanding". But he whote other treduces also of great exclience on Civil Government, on Education, and or the Horsonableure of Churchitty, &c. &c. Whin Lord Shafesbury was made Lord Ghamellor, he, having cone rived a high opinion of Locke's ablutes, gave him a valuable reponding in his office, but the connection with him subsequently proved a source of danger to Locke, who fid to ifoliand, and ramaned there till the Restoration, when he accompanied the Princess of Orange back to Fighand Abriliam Cookley is elevatibed by Johnson as the clut of the "interlightent ports," who sport there would by exertinate concests, and constant attempts at art, in suspen and out of essent, but the same entire girst his proce, a rotinum of cessive year light prime as having "an cass, and smooth equability, much the full may be a suspen for hard factored. In the filt sensy which nothing is far sought for hard factored. In the filt sensy that the following the filter of the fi nithout techiness, and familiar without grossices"

P 21 Tilloson' measure of sorting "This go at provider vas made Primate, greath) aguine him oan mil, by William HI when sancroft was depured on his refused to take the oth of allig muce to the mex Sourcegin Macunity attributes to lima to great share in perseasing the Primers Anne to consent to the one arringements Goldwarth's opinion of limit style closely agrees with that of Dryden, who, as Congree propert, "the postuly ones to will pleasure that if the land with their postuly ones to will please that if the land with their writings of the great Architecture Tillotson "—Profess to Driedste share."

Dr Isaac Barroso was almost equally enument as a classical scholar, a mathematician, and a divine. He was Greek Professor, and Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cumbridge, and afterwards Master of Trunty College He deal in 1677, at the early are of 48

tine early age of 18
Atterbury, Bishap of Rachestor, of his intimacy with whom Pape mais a frequent boosts. In the lines—

"How pleasing Atterbury's softer bour, How shin'd the soul unconquer'd in the Tower " Epilogue to the Satures, 82

he refers to he are at and subsequent behaviorant for complicity in plots for the restoration of the Pretender

P 22 Shaftesbury The third end, the author of several works cenerally condemned for their destroal tendency

P 23 Bolimpirale Henry St John, Load Beimpirale, was the Secretary of Stake who, in Annés region, negotisted the peuce of Utrecht, and was streamed unprovided for terr-sonable plots to restore the Pertender He field, but was subsequently permitted to return to England when Sir R Walpok was Primo Minister His reputations as no endow was unsubsward in his day, but that of a writer soon presult away. In one of his pumphlets Burlessis," Who reads Bolingbacke now?

F. 21 Ledge, be after writing several political pumphlets (our intitled "An Annwar to the King") organis William's Gorein ment, engaged in theological controversy with almost severy sect of Nonconformats. Macualay gives him the neight of hung been "of all the nonjung clergy the best qualified to discuss constitutional questions "—Hat of Eng., in 150.

P 25 Edpath and Dunton are mentioned in the 'Dinneral by Pope, who speaks of "Dunton's modern bed," and, two lines

afterwards, couples Redpath with Defee and others

"Endess on high stood unabash'd Defoc, And Tutchin frag int from the scourge below; There Ridgath, Roper and yell'd you might view." Discuss, ii 149

Addison and Steele have been spoken of in the Introduction And Dr Arbuthnot was the friend to whom Pope inscribed his 'Imitations of Horace,' now commonly known as his 'Satires and Epistles' He was the author of what is perhaps the best political satue in the language, "Somo Passages in the Lafe of John Bull," a name which the nation has over since, with entire complicancy, appropriated to itself. By some singular configuration it is usually published among the works of his friend Dean Swift, the still more celebrated author of 'The Tale of a Tub,' 'Gulliver's Travels,' and the 'Dramer's Letters' I do not know whether in the whole of these coays any thing is more remarkable than Goldsmith's complaint of Swift's deliciency in manimers and elemness of diction in political writing; though when the complaint is impartially examined, many will probably agree that it is not altogether took of foundation, but that Swift's postponement of all graces of style to the desire to be energetic and terse, too often makes his meaning somewhat obscure This defect is, however, less visible in the 'Diamer's Letters' than in his other political pamphlets, such as that on the 'Conduct of the Allies

10 D. For Goldsmith here speaks of the great author of Robinson Cruses' solely as a political pumplificers, on occupation which, in the changing times in which he laved, brought time alternately preference and suffering. In King William's time he was rewirded with a place. Under Anne he was put into pillory, as Pope spiritifily records in the prisage already quoted from the 'Dunesad' in the present century Walter South has made him the subject of entitiussite pursue, as indeed he especially deserved at his hands, since Deloc was his own precursor in that species of fiction to which he hunself owes perhaps his greatest popularity—the lasterical novel. His 'Memous of a Cavahui, 'rang be regarded as the prototype of Scotic admerally humoreus 'Lagual of Montrees', and his 'Minonis of Coptain Cultidon' is not only to this day the best account in the language of the exploits of the finnois Lord Peterborous', but has the amogine distinction of his may deceived the critical continess of Dr Johnson, who took it for a centum authorecash.

ESRAV VY

This cyay was individed in the first you of the reign of the pointer it segment with which it mixes must be about the pointer it segment with which it mixes must be daratings of a l'inhamentary. Opposition, provided its regular criticism of the measures of the carting administration does not degenerate into fictions party spurit, is the more remainful because just it that time the successes of Mi Pitt's wrible schemes, so flattening to our intional parts, but so mixed all patties this, to quote the Jungarya of Horsen Wilpole, "the numbers would so more hear 'No' from a county member than a suiter from an old mad."

Een VIII

P 43 "In the first ages of mankina, the unlettered mind must have been strick such subtime conceptions," As It is a singular connectence of ideas, if this sentence did not suggest to Wordsworth one of the most poetical passages in the "Neuriston."

> "The lively Greenii, in a land of hills, Rivers, and fortale plains, and sounding shores, Under a cope of sky more variable, Could find commodous place for every God.

A gay of pensive tendences prevailed Where prety more as fai had related "Take, mining tiver, take these locks of mine." Thus would the votary say, "this social him, My vow fulfilling, do I here present." Le de

P 15 The Salum priests They were priests of Mais-Vigal describes them —

Translated by Dryden —

"The Salu sing, and cense his alters round With Saban smoke, their heads with poplar bound "

377

195

P 45 "The Ord. one wag," be The best explanation of the tatle Other given to Diama (at Spatia charly) seems to be because her statue stood erect (open, upright). It is not very clear where Goldsmith pot the idea of any Greek people habitually sending then children to Diama, on the contrary, she refree described by enables (waddropopen, κουρόπροφορ) which atther represent her as the noursher or protectives of children, though it is time that in the story of 'lphingema' she (not a cheek, but a grown up rugni) was to be sentined to Diama.

The Sammeds are the tribe inhabiting the province of Northern Russia, which her to the east of the White Sea P 46 Milton alludes to the human sacrifiers to Moloch —

"First Moloch, hourd king, beamen'd with blood Of human securice and patents' teats"

Par. Lost, 1 392

P 47 "I w neil Lymps that Plate expelled Hower from his Commonweath," he Goldsauth is allusting to the following passages in the 'De value' of the great philosopher —'We insist not histories to have a many such as a guilty of the folly of saying that at the threshold for which is guilty of the folly of saying that at the threshold of a will all a work of the folly of saying that at the threshold of a will a guilty of the following the folly of the following the following that all of lots, one of good, the alter of et il" [1] ye, on and an a subsequent present he charges Homer "with a fault which is subsequent present he charges Homer with a fault which is must serious, the fault of telling a he and a had he, as when he makes an enoneous representation of the nature of the Gods shows Hephrestic brinding here has nother, and, on another occasion, Zeus sending him flying for taking her put when she was being beaten. Such takes must not be unimified into our State, whether they are supposed to born un allegoried menuing or an "-B in 378.

It is not, however, without great reinctance that he thus proceeded hun, since in a subsequent pressage he says, "I have always, from my cathest youth had an ave and love of Homm, which even now makes my words falter on my lips"—Hr v 595

P 48 The Staginte is the great philosopher and poetnal rate Aristotle, who was born at Stigin, a town of Three, no 38; He was the pupil of Plato, and the preceptor of

Alexander the Great

P 40 The "Cyclops" of Emipado a septerally interesting to the scholar, as being the only specime of the stryw drawn which has come down to us. "Rychethactive mark," as Schliged points out, is, "a chorn's constring of stryis, who accompointed with lively songs, pestures and movements, such hoose accompanies where of a more the efful her." Then there which found the ordinary subjects of tragedy. "The sature drawn of ver possessed on independent resistence, it was throw in by way of an appendage to several tragedies" (Schlegel, ' Permatic Literature, c 1 The subject of the Cyclopa was the adventure of Ulysses with Polynhemus, as de cribed in the 'Odysses,' and, after the time of Lumpules, by Lucrun

P 49 The At-Hana -Their oldest spoken dramas, those which were relled the 'Atelline Fables,' the Romans borrowed from the O cans, the engined inhabitants of Italy. The Occurs whose language annition only in those farces (ethistons of eportive humour), were at least so men alim to the Romans, that then dialect was intelligible to the Romans, who completely naturalised this discussion among themselves at the festivals. On which account the actor, whose nights profession it was to exhibit the Atellane Pables," stood exempt as privileged persons from the infamy attached to other theatrical nitists, namely, exclusion from the tribes. And they lil caree onjoyed an immunity from military service - Greek Theatr, edited by Prof Donaldson, chap vin p 301

In these Atelline fares no perhaps have the earliest gorni of the Commedia dell' Art, of the improvisatory fuses with strading and s -16

Ib Inberies The protect, or preserved by Macrobius, was-

"Multos timest necesse est, quem multi timeat" He needs must fear who makes all others four

House speaks disparaguigly of his plays or farces, which he calls much, and says he does not admire

"Nec Laberi mumos nt publica poemata miror "

P 50 The pl- It is angular that Goldsmith omits the first line of the passice which he quotes, and which attributes to Theses the credit of having devised a wholly novel entition The contied line is

> "Ignotum tergies games mechase Camena Dicitar," &c

"Thesms is said to have decised a kind of postry proviously unknown " In other respects this sketch of the rise of Tragedy and Comedy is as accounts as it is lively It may be well, however, to noint out that Dionisus is but another manie of Bicchus, specially applied to that god as the patron deity of the dramatic fistinals

P 52 The 'Margites was a sature rather on a fool than on a rogue. Four lines of at have been preserved by Plato or Aristotle, one of which, πόλλ' ηπίστατο έργα, ι ακώς δ' ηπίστατο -άντα. "He knew many arts, but knew them all bully."

[·] Library is the word constantly used by Horace for a drama whithey trans or coude.

NOTES 197

found in the "Alcibrades" of Plute, is the first description on record of a "Jack of all trades, but master of none" No one. however, regards the poem as a genuine work of Homer deed, sature is assentially the work of an artificial and compli cated state of somety

P 52 Empoles and Cratenus are joined with Aristophanes in the quotation from Horace which follows And of them Schlegel ays "The old crities were of opinion that Clations was nowerful in that biting satire which makes its attack without disense. but that he was deberent in pleasant humann ,"while "Eupolis, they tell us, was agreeable in his jokes, and ingenious in covert ullusions, but deficient in sature power. But Aristophanes, they add, by a happy medium united the excellence of both," Le "The most honourable testimony in favour of Austophanes is that of the aige Plate, who in an epigiam says that the Graces chose his soul for then abode, who was constantly seading him , and transmitted The Clouds, the very play in which, with the meshes of the Sophists, philosophy itself, and even his master Sperites, was attacked, to Dionysius the elder. with the icm uk that from it he would be best able to understand the state of things at Athens "-Dram Lit c XII

Alcibrades and Petreles are too prominent characters in ithenian history to make it necessary here to explain who thoy were

ESSAY IX

P 56 Michael Angelo, the great architect, painter and sculptor of the systeenth century, is classed by Ryion in his letters, and also in his 'Childe Haiold' (iv 54), with Machiavelli, Galileo. and Alheri as the four whose "tombs make Santa Crous (the cathedral in Florence) the Westminster Abbay of Italy "

Ib Lulls was a musical composer, who was horn at Florence in 1634, but who settled at Pins, where he was appointed musician to the court of Louis AIV, and director of the opens

He dud in 1687

P 57 Polybras, though an Achreun, and writing only in Greek. is the most trustworthy historian of the great Punic war

Ib Live, it need hadly be said, was the great historium of Rome, and one of the chaif literary ornaments of the Angua. tra age, though some start cuties accused his style of what they called Patavimity , in other words, forms of everes, sion which savonred not so much of Rome, as of Patavinia. the modern Padna, of which he was a native

Ib The Poline of Daspl are, however, unmersally behaved to have "had the advantage of versification" in their original language

To YT, Cells frame.pfe Macpheron had just published a small volume, entitled, "Tragments of ancient Party francisted NOTES from the Gashe or Erse language, which, two or three years later, he followed up with the publication of an entire opic poem, named 'Fingal,' which he affirmed that he had translated from a germine work of an ancient poet, minud Ossian genumeness of the poem (of which, as Johnson points out, Letter to Boswell, dated Feb 7, 1775, the original manu scripts had never been shown) was from the first doubted, and by most people the opinion of Walter Scott on the subject will be considered decisive on that point. As is well known, his prejudices were all in favour of trenthing connected with the ancient postry of the nation , and in a letter to Miss Seward (dated 1805, and given at length by Lockhart in his 'lafe,' c riv), he tells us that he had attentively considered the subject, and," after making every allegance for the disadvintages of a literal translation he is compelled to admit that incalculably the greater part of the English translation must be ascribed to Macpherson himself, and that his whole introduction, notes, &c , at a an absolute tissue of forgenes " It chould, however, in farmess be added that the present Professor of Poetry at Oxford, Dr. Sharp, seems hardly willing to (inbiaca so unityourable an opinion without some deduction

P 61 " The memory of Mr Pope" Dr Bentley's opinion, as expressed to Pope hunself, "A paetry poem, hir Pope, but you must not call it Homer," express the indigment that probably every one qualified to judge of the original has formed of the translation Pops, indeed, is generally believed to have had

but a very slight knowledge of Greek

ESSAY X

This is one of Goldsmith's latest essays, published in the Westminster Magazine for 1773 Shenstone had died in 176', at the age of forty-eight, but his poetry is of a very inferior class. He, perhaps, ones his admission by Johnson into his list of British poets to the fact of his having been, like the higgiapher hingelf, a member of Pembroke College, Oxford, but even Johnson admits that of his poems "he cannot think any excellent," he was, however, at hast as addicted to landscape gardening as to poetry, of which lolinson remarks that " perhaps a sullen and surly speculator may think it rather the sport than the business of human icuson," his disappror il being heightened if not prompted by the fact which he relates, that he so exhausted his means by the embellishment of his grounds that he had nothing to spare for the comfort of his house, but "when he came home from his walks he might fend his floors flooded by a shower through the broken roof "-Lives of the Poets, vol v In his 'Currosities of Leterature,' vol. 1 p 90, Mr District complans of Johnton's skatch of Shenstone, as very unfairly disparaging his posteral talents. And, with reference to his tasts for gradening, which is the subject of Geldsmith's essay, gives him the credit of hiving "in diveloping his fin, neather ideas in the 'Jessones', edicated the nation into that tasts for Ludscape gardening which his become the model of all Europe. Becaulty, Punkmonte his hazed the tasts of Pigisla gardening to Shenstone A man of genus sometimes recurse from foreigners, who are placed out of the prejudices of his comparisors, the 'challes of needed.'

ESSAY XI

Compare Pope's praise of the spader's skul -

"The spider's touch, how evaluately fine, Feels at each thread, and have along the line"

Essay on Man. 1 217

In the with book of the 'Metamorphoses,' Ovid relates the origin of the spider in one of his most exquisite descriptions, Arachne, 'allustraous for shall not for her burth,' was the daughter of a dyer of Colophon, in Asia Miner, and, as Minerva was informed, regulded herself as equal to the goddess in the work of the needle, Minerva disguised herself as an old woman and challenged her to a committeen of whill Minerya's embiendery represented the hill of Mars at Athen, and twolve desties etting there in judgment, with Jupiter as their president Ariehne minted the stones of Europa, Lad i. Daute and other objects of Jupiler's lave Her work was so admirable that neither Minerva not Envy itself could find aught to disputage in it. The godders was indignant at thus having failed to surpass her , tore her work to pieces, and with a blow in the foreherd changed her into a spider, in which form "antiquas exercet aranea telas," sho still weaves her webs By a family of illustrious Scotchmen, the spader is held in even greater honour than her equality with Minerva could have earned for her, from the legend of Bauce, who, while wandering in the wilds of Curick, after his defeat in Ayishire, and the execution of his brother found shelter on one occasion in a deserted but , unable to sleep, his attention was attracted by a spider which was endervouring to reach a rafter in the roof, but six times fuled in its exertions. The seventh effort succeeded, and the httle meert attached its thread to the point at which it had so often and fruitlessly aimed. And then Bruce to offected, that he himself had been aix times defeated. and he regarded the spiders success in its seventh attempt as an omen that he too might find a seventh enterprise successful He raised a fresh army, with which he defeated Lord Pembroke at London Hill and had the foundation of his country's tem porary independence, and from that day no one of the name of Bruce will ever kill a spider

ESMY AIII

We us here introduced to the "Gentleman in Block," whose herefort is described at some largiful in to with quent, excise of the period in the sense herefore in the work of the period in the period i

"The secretary por are forbidden to it."

For what Mr. Humo calls a mo t scandalous for "

Incolding Legard.

Lien XIV

P of "Man, for is born to insfortures," he Compare Popular description of the greatest trul that can hafelf and be endured in patience by a fringle collector of currently. —

"Mestics of herself, though churt fall "
Moral France, 11 268

1-00 XV

This humanity to forefaces, even then we have been at two might be compared, now so the event depth of the same the great way is not entitled and the reason from 1704 to 2515, when the condition of the land of the event for the respect to the condition of the event for the condition of the event for the event

ESSAYS XVI, XVII

This description of the father of the Mon is Black is under took to have been taken, a many of its mudernt, from the character and attaction of Goldentit's own father. In that respect it resembles the packings he draw of Dr. Prunton in the optimize chapters of the "Fixer of Wakefold," and the reasstance of the Mon is Black to the proposal that he should become a clera, man was a representation of at last some of the consultations which consisted Goldsmith himself when the Consultations which consisted Goldsmith himself when the Black found himself as a larger out to a great nobleman, is portrayed in the adventures of Group Trincates at the himself of Squire Themby?

ESSAL AVIII

In the ungrounty of his allegours followith must be admitted to how fully qualify Addison, as well as in the cut with which he makes each action the visible of a monid bessul we have find an exception of the stress of the second stress of the second seco

P 110 "Tacitis descentie" Virgil adds Averno (Dn vi 120) Drylen trunslates the passage in a phrase strikingly adapted to the winning Goldsmith movies to incule it.

"The gates of hell are open might and day "

ESSAY XIX

P 118 The Zudou-she of Zeroster The Zerolvects, so beam of from "Zerol," the uncant language of Yeron, such the work in which Zeroster, the Penson language, of unlawd in virtuality, expounded has system of philosophy, which (Silvon (e. 11) chemics as a bold intempt to recomme the existence of evil with the of the burse is bruilled in the principle of the world.

In "In The This busse" Compare Crul Med 2 55

'Nondum exer sur, programma at reserct others Monthly, in liquidas prins de conderit mides Nullaque ma (21-, prefer sar, 1 tars mit null' I can slated by Driden-

"Happy mortals, unconsum'd for more, Confin'd their wishes to their nalive shore"

D-54. 37

P 120 "A man of the fir 'quality,"d. This refers to the case of Eul l'errers, a man in whom an habitual fure of all is more almost amounted to meanity, and who had recently been hanged for the murder of his steward

"The neighbouring country" means France, and "thep ison still alive" means the Count de Charelan We read in one of Walpole's letters (date Oct 28, 1752), "The Count de Charolais shot a presplent's lee a president of one of the chambers of the parliament dog, who haves near him The president im-mediately posted to Versulles to complain The king promised him instice, and then sent to the count to desire he would give him two good dogs The prince parked out his two heel king sent them to the president with this motto on their collers-j'appretient as see "There," and the Lung, 'I believe he wan t shoot them now " And to this preside Lord Dover, in his edition of the letters, appended the following note - Charles de Bourbon, Count de Charolus, next brother to the Due de Bourbon who succeeded the Regent d'Orleans as Prime Minister of Liance The Count was a man of the famous character, and committed more than one munder. When Louis XV purioused him for one of these atractics he said to him, 'I tell you furly, that I will all o pardon any man who number- you. But it may be doubted a better the expression 'pardon' is entirely applicable, since Lacretelle, though he numbers the saying of the lung which Lord Dover quoteadds 'Co fut est ecrtamement mexict; mie grace suppo tine accussion, in proces, un jugement; on n'en traits a point de trice à l'egard du Comte de Charolus "-Hi t de Irane pendant le 18rie ulele, l vi vol u p 69

HAZZ CASST

Prior remarks that "this paper, to credit dde to Goldenith's ob ereation and sadgement, entrepetonic explains [among other thingal what has ever been, and is to this day, a course of morder to forciguer, the resuming maps ruth offered i to pointeed demagagues, and the little alarm excited by popular tunnils in England The same I malesh free torn as the subject of one of his termine properties in "The Traceller," where he aported 10 150 11-

Three Locion, are the bloom experied her There are the . Larms that dryle as I and inNOTES. 203

Esgay XXIII

The great Emperor of Rassas is Peter the Great, who was bound 1672, succeeded histachta I vanu in 1606, and, though his reign did not last thirty years, since he died in 1725, had made in that comparatively short time great progress in the task he set before himself of craising his subjects and developing the resources of he empre, thirs lying the foundation of the power which during the list hundred years Rassas has since exclused in Empre.

P 155 "The German empre appears" on the we of dissolium". We must remembe that this kirt was written in the undild of the seven years war which Plusha, with the and of England, has warging against the cupier. The predetion, evidently thetried by Goldwight's clear perception of the man valle weakness of the imperial constitution, does orefit to his penetration, though he could not have forescen the conquests of Mapoleon, which were the immediate causes of the dissolution.

tion of the unipire

But the pairs uph which speaks of the progress cowards incommy which the French were making is a far more romalkable instance of his political sages by and foreight. It has often been stied as a proof of Loud Chestenheid's noticences of observation that he had made a similar prediction. In one of the lettins to his could be examined him "to attend putching to the affails of France. They grow school," and for, "and my opanion will grow much so every day. The propile are poor consequently discontented. These who have teligion are my opinion with given more so every day. This propose are poor correspond of the south at the late to the control of the whole it is saying that they hat one another. The turny must, without doubt, take (in their own minds at least) different puts in all these disputes. The Freich nation teasons fietly, which they nevel did

. The French nation reasons fieldy, which they nevel diblote, upon natities of tobgen and government, and brem to be promined and brem to be promined as when I have extract with a history previous to great changes and neodutions in government not exist and dady nations in France. The two passages will desirve to be compared, but in comparing them at must be done in mind that Land Chassis field was vecture withesamin, and the same properties of the properties

204

"Industry begets a love of gram,
Then much low'd wealth imparts,
Consenses, pleaty, elegance, and arts,
But near them closes, wast and frand appear,
Ev'n liberty itself is barter'd larre?

ESSAY XXVI.

P 143 "Fortune as ever so a accompanying industry" Comme Holace.—

"To samper intent seem necessitas" — Od 1 35, 18
Necessity precedes Fortune by compelling man to industry

ESSAN ANVII

P 170 "If you would find the golders of Grace," &c Compace Tribulling --

"Talis in atomo feli. Vertumuus Olympo, Mille habet ornatus, mille decenter habet "-11 4 14 "So the happy Vertunious has a thousand forms, but all becoming and graceful"

ESSAY XXIX

M: Prior anotes an article in the 'Edinburgh Review,' on Su George Stunnton's imblication of the Penal Code of the Chinese, which especially commends the clearness and conuseness of the Chipese laws, "savouring throughout of practied judgment and European good sense" But this essay, more normans than any other written me the whole century, proves the writer to have been in advance of his age. For the maxim which in it he lays down, that while ' point laws seems property in a state, they also diminish personal security m the same proportion," and that "a multitude of severe laws fuls to mercase the means of satisfying justice." was not adopted as the principle of our penul legislature till the very end of the reign Our code was, indeed, too truly gold to be written in blood till the humane personerance of Romilly and Machintosh roused a spart of inquery, which gradually resulted in such a medification of its spirit, that it is now among the most mercuful in Christendom

ESSAY XXXI

P 161 "I fonce the character of a post is an energy country the came" Mr Prior remarks that this "sketch is di win, no doubt, from Goldsmith's own character, and certainly with strong points of recemblance".

10 Plantas and Tereme were unities of comedies at Rome, but none of their works are august, then drames are only

NOTES 205

what Schlegel calls "translations or recests of Greek works." he adds, truly, that they me "negligent in their versification." and that "their language, at least that of Plantus, is deficient

in cultivation and polish "-D.am Let e 14

P 162 Boothaws is called by Gibbon "the last of the Romans whom Cato or Tully could have acknowledged for their countryman" He was a senator who in the reign of Theodoric (a D 493-526) filled more than one honourable office in the state Being accused of treason and thrown into puson at Payia, he employed his leasure with composing a work which he entitled. The Consolution of Philosophy," "a golden volume not unworthy of the lessure of Plato on Tully The writings of the philosopher were translated by the most glorious of the English kings " (Alfred) 'Decline and Fall,' e vaviv Dr Johnson, while he pronounced him rather a philosopher than a Christian (Bosnell's 'Life,' ann 1770), yet thought highly enough of his work to urge Mis Carter to retianslate it

16 Tasso Compus Byron

"And Tasso is then glory and their shame, Hank to his strem, and then smyer his cell'

P 183 Certailes The mention of Certantes, the immortal anthor of 'Don Qurate,' shows that the title of this letter. 'Anecdotes of Poets,' ought to be enlarged. And indeed the addition of the name of Vangelas, celebrated in Mohine's ' Femmes Savantes,' who can endure nothing

"Qui en termes expres condainne Vangelas," and of Cassandie, a translator of some of Aristotle's worls, whom Borleau makes aspeat of kiniscif

"Je sms austique et fier, et j'ai l'âme grossière," an avowel which may well explain his poverty, shows that he was led, as he wrote on, to i tend his list to every class of liter irv men

Of Butler, the author of 'Hudibras,' Goldsmith had a pu ticular admiration, and in an elaborate across of his norkranked him on a level with, if not above, Swift as a humorist

LUCAY XXXIV.

This letter is remarkable for the umon which it displays of sound philosophy and practical signesty with views which can hardly be reguded as having any foundation but a strange credulity To learn from the wisdom of other nations was placed by the was Homer in the very front of the advantageous results derived by Ulysses from his protracted wanderings And to travel in order to enlarge the minds of his countrymen by an acquirintance with arts new to them, but mactised

in distrat lands, and in return to diffuse European knowledgeamong peoples to whom the comforts on sciences of the Westuras yet miknown, wan entraperse at once philosophical and humaine. But, though each succeeding generation is so ferthe in invertions that it seems hazardows to pronounce any discovery beyond the reach of burness insegnably, it is not easy to read, without a sincle scatteress implying a belief in "the power of the Asartes in producing winds, or lunging down rain".

It is remarkable that inclve or thritten years after the publication of this sketes, Dr. Johnson inged upon the great Governor-General of Indry, Waren Hastines, a consideration of the advantages to be derived from an investigation of the advantages to be derived from an investigation of the advantages to be derived from an investigation of the advantages to be derived, "inclusional exposually "acts of main facture practiced in the continues under Hasting's Government, as yet imperfectly known in England either by attituees on philosophias." And it is no impuse to Johnson to suppose that his aggentess for such inquiries was in some degree dictated by a secollection of this lettle of Goldania.

And a century ago it would certainly have council oven more remulable, if, as we have even in this generation, one of those whose havels have been most extended, embracing the whole confinent of North America, Palestine, and Hindostan, had been the hen of the British Crown, the lutine Soveteign

P 173 Geneth Genielli was a Neupolitan, who in the last

P 175 Geneta Geneta was a Mapolitan, who in the lastyears of the 17th century published a mention of a vegage cound the world, which is here mentioned as having been generally disredicted by the beaused men of the next generation. But in the piesent century the man who of all others has been the best qualified to form an opinion, Buron Humboldt, hanfirmed in the most positive manuel his conviction of the truth of all Genyllic statements.

VXX LAGET

The practice of promoting every variety of object, municipal, sentitie, or charable, by large diments we we repromoting municated as ever. But the decises treating, described into an author with such eventual relating, described into a partial promotion of the property of the modern characteristics are single day. Its suppression is one of the modern characteristic state of the modern characteristics of the modern characteristics of the modern characteristics and the modern characteristics of the modern characteristi tightly, and fixed in the same manner to the wall as before

In this manner it spins and fixes several threads pruillel to each other, which, so to speak, serve as the warp to the intended web. To form the woof, it spins in the same manner its thread, transversely taing one end to the first thread that was spin, and which is always the strongest of the whole web, and the other to the wall. All these threads, being newly spin, are glutanous, and therefore stick to each other whetever they happen to touch, and in those parts of the web most exposed to be torn, our natural artist strengthens them, by doubling the threads semetimes saxfold.

Thus far naturalists have gone in the description of this animal, what follows is the result of my own observation upon that species of the insect called a house epider. I perceived, about four years ago, a linge spider in one corner of my room, making its web, and, though the mand frequently levelled her fatal broom against the labours of the little animal, I had the good fortune then to prevent its destruction, and, I may say, it more than paid me by the entertainment is afforded. In three days the web was, with more thisle dis-entertainment it afforded. In three days the web was, with meredible diligree, completed, nor could I avoid thinking, that the meet seemed to exalt in its new abode. It frequently tradersed it round, examined the strength of every part of it, retired into its hole, and came out ever frequently. The first enemy, however, it had to recountry, was mother and a much larger speker, which, hiving no webof its own, and having probably exhausted all its stock in farmer labours of this kind, time to invade the property of its neighbour Soon, then, a terrible encounter ensued, in which the invader seemed to have the victory, and the laborious spider was obliged to take refuge in its hole. Upon this I perceived the victor using every art to draw the enemy from his stronghold. His seemed to go off, but quickly returned, and when he found all arts in vain, began to destroy the new web without meney. This brought on another battle, and, contrary to my expectations, the laborious spider became conqueror, and fairly killed his antagonist.

75

Now, then, in peaceable possession of what was justly its own, it waited three days with the utmost impatience, repairing the breaches of its web, and taking no sustenance that I could perceive. At last, however, a large blue fly fell into the snare, and struggled hard to get loose. The spidor gave it leave to entangle itself as much as possible, but it seemed to be too strong for the colored. I must own I was greatly supprised when I saw the spider manediately sally out, and in less than a minute weave a now net round its capture, by which the motion of its wings was stopped, and when it was fairly hampered in this manner, it was seried and dragged into the hole.

In this manner it lived, in a precarious state, and nature seemed to have fitted it for such a life, for upon a single fly it subsisted for more than a week I once put a wasp into the net, but when the spider came out in order to seize it as usual, upon perceiving what kind of an enemy it had to deal with, it instantly broke all the bands that held it fast, and contilibuted all that lay in its power to disengage so formidable an antagonist. When the wasp

was at hierty, I expected the spider would have set about repairing the breaches that were made in its net, but those, it seems, were inequable, wherefore the colored was now entirely forsiken, and a new one begun, which was completed in the usual time

I had now a mind to try how many colwebs a spilet could furnish, wherefore I destayed this, and the mesot set about another When I destayed the other also, its whole stock seemed enturely evaluated, and it could spin no more. The arts it made use of to support itself, now departed of its great means of subsistence, were indeed surprising. I have seen it roll up its legs like a bill and he motionless for hous together, but cautiously nothing all the time when a fly happened to approach sufficiently near, it would dart out all at once, and often seize its prey

Of this life, however, it soon began to grow wenry, and resolved to invide the prosession of some other spiden, since it could not make a web of its own. It formed an attack upon a neighbouring fortafication with great vigour, and at first was as vigorously repulsed. Not dainted, however with one defent, in this manner it continued to by siego to another's seb for three days, and at longth, having laffled the defend int, actually took possession. When smaller these buppen to fall into the snare, the spider does not eally out at ones, but very rationtly waits till it is sure of them, for, upon his immediately approaching, the terror of his appearance might give the captive strength sufficient to get loose the manner them is to wait patiently till, by ineffectival and impotent struggles, the captive his wasted all his strength, and then he becomes a certain and easy conquest

The insect I am now describing lived three years; every year it changed its skin, and got a new set of legs I have sometimes plucked off a leg, which grew again in two or three days. At first it dreaded my approach to the web, but at last it became so familiar as to take a fly out of my hand, and upon my touching any part of the web, would immediately leave its hole, prepared either for a defence or an attack

To complete this description, it may be observed, that the male spiders are much less than the female, and that the latter are ovipuous. When they come to lay, they spread a part of their web under the eggs, and then soll them up carefully, as we roll up things in a cloth, and thus hatch them in their hole If disturbed in their holes, they never attempt to oscape without carrying this young brood in their forceps away with them, and thus frequently are sacrificed to their parental affection

As soon as ever the young ones leave their artificial covering, they begin to spin, and almost sensibly seem to grow bigger If they have the good fortune, when even but a day old, to catch a fly, they fall to with good appetites, but they live sometimes three or four days without any sort of sustenance, and yet still continue to grow larger, so as every day to double then former size As they grow old, however, they do not still continue to mererse, but their legs only continue to grow longer , and when a spider becomes entirely stiff with age, and unable to seize its prey, it dies at length of hunger